Store Head Kidnaped And Forced To Open Safe

Bandits Make Him Return to Market Where $10,000 Is Taken as Loot

Two bandits kidnaped the manager of the Giant Food Store, 1438 Rhode Island ave. ne., last night and forced him to go to the store and hand over $10,000 from the store safe.

The manager, Albert Murphy, 37, told police the bandits approached him at about 10 p. m. near his home, 4209 Russell ave., Mount Rainier, as he returned after closing the store and forced him into a car.

After they had driven to the store and Murphy had handed the bandits the $10,000 from the safe, the bandits drove the store manager back into Prince Georges County and dropped him off at Eastern ave. and Russell ave., near Kaywood Gardens.

Holdup Man Takes Sam Chin's Savings

The .38-caliber revolver that Sam Chin bought as a protection against holdup men didn't save him from a $110 holdup last night.

Sam, who is 48, runs a laundry at 1938 4th st. nw. He kept the revolver in his cash drawer. He told police he was alone shortly after 7 p. m. when a man entered. Sam thought he was a customer until the man pointed a revolver at him, told him to stand still, and demanded to know where the cash drawer was.

Sam was too far from the cash drawer to make a leap for it. He pointed to it. The bandit ordered Sam to lie down on the floor. Sam lay down. He heard the thief go to the drawer, then leave the store. Sam jumped up, ran to the cash drawer. The bills and coins from many days of work—$110 in all, Sam said—were gone. But the revolver had been overlooked by the bandit.

Sam picked it up, ran to the sidewalk and fired several shots at a hurrying figure disappearing west on Elm st. Sam told police the bandit was a dark-skinned Negro, about 25 to 30 years old, about 5 feet 8 inches tall, weighing about 175 pounds, with straight black hair and wearing a coffee-colored suit and no hat.

Police said Sam was saving the money to take a slow boat back to China.

Man in Dark Glasses Robs Liquor Store

A pint-sized gunman hiding behind dark sunglasses held up a liquor store, at 1203 H st. ne., at about 11 last night and escaped with between $200 and $300.

A clerk in the store, Ralph E. Riggs, 28, of 3700 Ely pl. se., said the bandit, a white man about 5 feet, 5 inches, entered, shoved a Luger under his nose and directed: "Give me all your bills."

After he had been handed the cash, the gunman herded Riggs and Herbert Linder, one of the owners of the store, into a rear room and escaped.

Minister Orders Flag Taken From Veteran's Casket

Hopewell, Va., Dec. 11 (AP).—A Hopewell minister ordered the removal of an American flag from a war veteran's casket Thursday precipitating a controversy which today appeared likely to reach the top Virginia echelons of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

When the flag-draped coffin of Robert E. Williamson, Spanish-American war veteran, arrived at West End Presbyterian Church for a military funeral, accompanied by pallbearers from the local VFW post, the Rev. William E. Hill, the pastor, said the flag must come off.

He said the church's congregation had voted months ago that no flag should be displayed in the church auditorium. His interpretation of the ruling, he said, would include the flag on the casket.

A funeral director removed the flag, but afterward pallbearers from VFW Post 637 refused to touch either the flag or the casket.

The flag was replaced after the service, and the pallbearers again took up their duties.

At the cemetery, the official VFW firing squad heard about the incident and went looking for the Rev. Mr. Hill. They reported he could not be found.

Post Commander W. L. Goodwin said there would be no more VFW services held in West End Church under those conditions.

"The church is a house of worship," the Rev. Mr. Hill said today. "The flag, in my opinion, should not be brought into it under any circumstances."

E. H. Walsh, fourth district commander for the Veterans of Foreign Wars, said: "When I have assembled all the facts, I will take the matter up with the State Department."

D. C. Schools Racial Policy Is Defended

Board Carries Out Law, Mrs. Doyle Says Of Segregation Study

Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, president of the Board of Education, yesterday deplored criticism of segregation policies in District schools contained in a national committee report on segregation in the Nation's Capital.

"The law on the statute books calls for a segregated school system and the Board of Education is carrying out the law."

She deplored a tendency of the committee's report "to criticize practically every force in the community which is attempting social progress.

"The social mores of a community change slowly," she said. "I think the report would have done well to emphasize the factor of slow change."

To the claim of the committee report that Washington teachers are also segregated, and are given two identical speeches by the school superintendent each September, Mrs. Doyle said:

"That is perfectly true. There isn't a room big enough to hold them all at one time in any of the buildings. However, all our committees—those which choose the curriculum and the books—are interracial, and hold interracial meetings. And the Board of Education itself is interracial in composition."

To the committee's statement that "in 1947 15 per cent of the city's colored school children were getting only part-time instruction," Mrs. Doyle said:

"A report within the last month shows that in the entire school system there are now about 2200 school children receiving part-time instruction. And a few more than half of those students are white students, the rest Negroes."

No comment was forthcoming yesterday from officials of the Washington Board of Trade, characterized in the report as the dominant interests in the city, and the "friends of court" which actually run Washington.

Col. William Press, trade board spokesman, said officials of the group have not yet finished reading the report, and that in any event any comment would be made by the board of directors, which meets next in January.

At Gridiron Fete

'Saint Harry' And Dewey Are Panned

The Gridiron Club poked fun at its own misguided political experts at its annual dinner last night at the Hotel Statler.

Before about 500 guests representing the diplomatic, political, business and newspaper life of the Nation, club members presented a series of laugh-provoking sketches.

The satire spun from the election and the wrong-guessers to President Truman and Governor Dewey, a Russian radio broadcast, Congress, unification of the armed forces and the House Un-American Activities Committee.

President Truman and two of the candidates he defeated in the November election, Dewey and Governor Thurmond of South Carolina, who headed the Dixiecrat ticket, joined in the laughter.

Mr. Truman and Dewey both made "off-the-record" addresses, the President's talk coming at the close of the dinner.

France Lays ERP Snag to British Scheme for Pound

Paris, Dec. 11 (AP). — France bluntly blamed Britain tonight for one of the snags on which European recovery planning is stuck.

A Foreign Office statement said Britain is trying to dominate western European trading "in order to make the pound sterling a rare money."

In London, a treasury spokesman expressed surprise and declined comment.

Britain, the French statement said, presented her plan for cooperation with the European Recovery Program (ERP) under which she "would reduce nearly to nothing her purchases in western Europe and would, on the contrary, increase her exports."

Red Filibuster Blocks U. N. Adjournment

Talk on Korea Keeps Assembly in Session; To Reconvene Today

(From Press Dispatches)

Paris (Sunday), Dec. 12.—A Soviet bloc filibuster on Korea prevented the scheduled adjournment of the United Nations General Assembly early today and it recessed until 3 p. m. (9 a. m. E. S. T.).

Before recessing, the Assembly:

1. Approved the setting up of a three-nation Palestine Conciliation Commission to supervise Arab-Jewish negotiations for a permanent peace in Palestine. The vote was 35 to 15, with 8 abstentions. The United States, France and Turkey were named to the commission, 40 to 7, with 4 abstentions.

2. Approved a 1949 budget of $41,500,000. The vote was 48 to 0 with the Russian bloc abstaining.

3. Adopted Spanish as a third working language, 39 to 0, with 11 abstentions. English and French are the other two.

Weary Assembly President Herbert Evatt of Australia recessed the meeting at 2 a. m. (8 p. m. Saturday E.S.T.) when it appeared the eastern states were determined to rehash all the old stock Communist complaints about American rule in Southern Korea.

Dmitri Manuilski of the Ukraine had spoken for 55 minutes. China's T. S. Tsiang gave an eight-minute answer. But then K. V. Kisselev of Byelo-Russia took over the Soviet spiel.

The Assembly has been meeting since September 21.

Supply Route to Capital

Hwai River Nanking Defenses Reported Penetrated by Reds

Nanking, Dec. 11 (AP).—This Chinese capital's Hwai River defenses were reported pierced today by two Communist columns—possibly 30,000 men—bent on cutting the vital supply route 71 miles by rail northwest of Nanking.

Reliable informants who gave this grave news said government reinforcements already had arrived at the threatened station of Mingkuang.

The Communist crossing was reported to have been made about 40 miles east of Pengpu and 90 miles west of Nanking. No other details were available. But it appeared that the line—last Nanking defense save the Yangtze River itself—had been penetrated rather than broken.

Nanking high command sources said the immediate result of the struggle for Nanking's close approaches hinged on ability of the government Sixth Army Group to liberate remnants of the trapped Twelfth Army Group about 145 miles northwest of Nanking.

A top-level staff officer predicted the liberation in about three days. Such a development might make untenable the position of the Reds below the Hwai.

However, Harold K. Milks, AP correspondent with the Sixth, reported it still was 25 miles short of a juncture. He depicted it as fighting spiritedly but slowly, village by village across the bleak plains country.

High command sources acknowledged that in more than two weeks in the Communist trap the Twelfth Army Group had suffered about 40,000 casualties and was down to about 60,000 fighting men.

The war thus developed into a curious race. If the Communists can hit the railway below the Hwai hard enough, they may slow the rescue drive and win time to complete destruction of the trapped Twelfth.

If the Twelfth is destroyed, Communist Gen. Liu Po-Cheng can turn his containing columns south toward Nanking or north against another large body of trapped government trops—the former Suchow garrison.

This second trapped force originally totalled three army groups of 10,000 fighters plus up to 140,000 base personnel.

It is admitted to have suffered about one third casualities and now has been reorganized into two groups. They are pinned in a 25-mile-square area southwest of Suchow and 40 miles northwest of the trapped Twelfth.

The Twelfth is in serious plight.

Winners of Congress Posts Fare Well in House Hunting

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

New Senators and Representatives are batting for a slightly better than .500 average at this mid-point in the open season on Washington house hunting.

And the city's housing and civic association people, working in a well-organized cooperative effort figure this a relatively bright picture considering that:

1. Three fourths of the 134 new legislators, reluctant to interrupt post-election vacations at home, are negotiating for housing accommodations by "remote control."

2. Most Congressmen want furnished apartments averaging $150 per month, and the supply of them, as residents know, is practically non-existent.

3. The newcomers on the house-hunt are finding stiff competition from an equally large number of incumbent Congressmen who last summer and fall gave up their apartments and houses for reasons that politicians are hesitant to discuss.

Central clearing agency in the city's drive to get Congressmen adequately housed is the Board of Trade's housing subcommittee of the committee on congressional relations. Headed by Charles C. Koones, the group went to work

Costa Rica Invaded Via Nicaragua

Former President Calderon Said to Be Planning to Set Up Provisional Regime

San Jose, Costa Rica, Dec. 11 (U.P.).—Provisional President Jose Figueres tonight mobilized every able-bodied man to repel an invasion from Nicaragua. He threatened "real war" against Nicaragua, claiming troops of that country were behind the invasion.

Nine days ago Figueres abolished the army, saying Costa Rica was peaceful and had no fear.

Figueres' chief political antagonist, Dr. Rafael Angel Calderon Guardia, was reported at the border awaiting word to proceed to Liberia, some 50 miles inside Costa Rica, to set up a provisional government there. Invasion troops were said to have reached Liberia after a successful landing on the Pacific coast.

A Hive of Activity

In Managua, Nicaragua, the government denied Nicaraguan troops had entered Costa Rica or helped the invasion attempt of Costa Rican revolutionists.

In Washington, Costa Rica's Ambassador, Mario A. Esquivel, asked the Council of the Organization of American States formally to invoke the Western Hemisphere Defense Treaty. Council President Enrique V. Corominas called the council to meet at 3 p.m. Sunday.

Under the treaty, which became effective eight days ago, 14 nations, including the U. S. are pledged to aid any signatory attacked from outside its borders.

San Jose tonight was a hive of intense military activity. Truckloads of troops were leaving constantly for the northern frontier from concentration centers.

They had weapons of every description, including heavy and automatic arms, in large quantities.

Figueres asserted that only a handful of Costa Rican exiles were mixed in the invasion and that they were just a "front" for Nicaraguan national guards.

Climaxing months of mounting political tension throughout Central America, the invasion was seen by close observers as the spark that could ignite the whole Central American powder keg. They said that if Nicaraguan planes attacked Costa Rica, Guatemala would enter the war and attack Nicaragua from the air.

Only 11 days ago, Figueres had dissolved the army with which he won a five-week civil war in April and May. However, he retained a well armed and trained police force which was being used as the nucleus for a new army.

Calls for Support

In Managua earlier, Calderon Guardia said in a manifesto:

"With absolute faith in the triumph of our cause, I call upon my fellow citizens to follow me. My aim is to restore the state of things destroyed by a group of insensate men led by Jose Figueres, a legal and spiritual adventurer."

Figueres admitted the invaders had taken La Cruz, a small town about 5 miles inside the border, near the Pacific coast.

Managua newspapers reported that a revolutionary movement had broken out in Costa Rica, coincidentally with the invasion, and involving the provinces of San Jose, in the center of the country, and Alajuela, bordering on Nicaragua.

Claims by both sides indicated forces in the field may soon exceed 6000 men.

CODE BREAKER?—This document is the only one of the lot released yesterday which is from the microfilm taken from a pumpkin on the Westminster (Md.) farm of Whittaker Chambers. It is a copy of a message transmitted in Navy code in 1938 to the State Department by Col. Frank Dorn, now assistant commandant of the Armed Forces Information School at Carlisle Barracks, Pa. Dorn told The Washington Post that the message, sent from Tsingtao, China, where he was observing the Japanese occupation of North China, could have been used as a code-breaking key

Of Probable 1938 Value

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

The House Un-American Activities Committee yesterday released 12 of some 200 documents it said were filched from State Department files in 1938 for transmission to Soviet Russia.

The documents contained a total of 21 diplomatic messages.

One of the 21 was accompanied by a memorandum purporting to identify it as being in the handwriting of Alger Hiss, former State Department official. Hiss has been accused by Whittaker Chambers, self-described former Communist courier, as having been one of his contacts who supplied him with documents from State Department files.

Although only one handwritten paper was included among those released yesterday, the accompanying memorandum refers to two others as in Hiss' handwriting.

In general the documents, read yesterday appear entirely innocuous except that:

1. They indicate that State Department files actually were being rifled for the benefit of a foreign power.

2. Many of the documents, having originally been transmitted in code, provided keys to decipher the codes if they were previously intercepted in transmission.

3. They might have provided information of value at the time they were stolen.

Memorandum Unsigned

The handwritten memorandum, unsigned and dated March 3 (1938), read:

"(Herschel V.) Johnson, U. S. Attache at London, cabled that Lord Chatfield had told the Naval Attache that whether escalation was eventually decided or not, he would not change his plans for cruisers this year, and in any case, new battleships would not be laid down before the end of the current year."

What this apparently obscure memorandum really meant is revealed by former Secretary of State Cordell Hull's "Memoirs" Hull wrote that the United States had been receiving reports, chiefly from Italian sources, that Japan in 1938 was building warships above the limitations laid down by the London Naval Treaty of 1936, which Japan had not signed.

This treaty contained an "escalator clause" providing that its sig-

This Government Retaliates

Romania Expels 4 Diplomats Of U. S., Britain as 'Plotters'

By The Associated Press

Romania is throwing out two American and two British diplomats and the United States is retaliating by similar orders for two Romanian envoys assigned to Washington.

The Romanian Communist government said the four it is tossing out conspired with "spies and saboteurs." The United States called this ridiculous. Britain delayed a decision on whether to demand the recall of Romanian diplomats from London.

This latest flareup in the cold war was revealed both here and in Bucharest, where the major action centered. It involved an exchange of diplomatic insults in polite terms.

The four Anglo-American diplomats had been named in trials in Romania of alleged plotters, spies and saboteurs. In the latest of these trials the government alleged one of the defendants had confessed the Americans and

Argentine Frost Damage May Cut Wheat by a Third

Buenos Aires, Dec. 11 (NYHT)—With the Argentine government now officially admitting serious frost damage to wheat during the last month, trade circles today estimated that Argentina's wheat crop would be off 25 to 33 per cent from last year's 6,663,600 metric tons.

This could mean the loss of from 1,666,000 to 2,200,000 tons of wheat to the world's food supply, roughly equivalent to Argentine wheat exports of 2,025,000 tons this year.

A reliable British weekly here estimated the 1948-49 wheat harvest at only four million tons. The crop is now halfway harvested. If this should prove true, Argentina's wheat exports for 1949 might drop to one million tons.

Clay Says Reds In Berlin Have 'Done Worst'

Berlin, Dec. 11 (U.P.).—Gen. Lucius D. Clay, American commander in Germany, said today he believes the Russian blockade of Berlin has reached its saturation point.

Only a few hours before the Russians had eased travel and mail restriction with Berlin.

"There is not much else they can do now to embarrass us," he said. "I can think of nothing they can do—barricading the streets between their part of the city and ours, or cutting transportation facilities—that would not be as crippling to them as to us."

Mail was moving between the Soviet and western sectors of Berlin today after a four-day halt. Traffic between the two areas moved without interruption subject only to the usual checks by Soviet sector police. Yesterday the Russian-controlled police prohibited western sector vehicles from entering eastern Berlin without a permit.

In another move today, the Russians repeated their warning that unidentified aircraft intercepted over the Soviet zone will be "forced down." The warning, delivered to the American military government, reaffirmed the Soviet position announced in a previous letter on November 9. Brig. Gen. Charles Gailley, American chief of

2 Plays Closed By Finns After Soviet Protest

Helsinki, Finland, Dec. 11 (AP).—Finland has shut down two plays in Helsinki theaters at the suggestion of Russia, which described the plays as "hostile to the Soviet Union."

They are Jean Paul Sartre's "Dirty Hands" (called "Red Gloves" in English-language presentations) and a musical production of 1920 by Sam Sihvo, "Grenadier's Bride," with Finland's fight for independence from the Russian czars as its theme.

The Soviet charge d'affaires in Helsinki, Colonel Feodorov, delivered a note Sunday to Foreign Minister Carl Enckell describing the plays as propaganda against the U.S.S.R., and expressing hope Finland's government would take immediate steps to close them.

Communists had criticized both. (Sartre, French author of "Red Gloves," complained in Paris recently that it had been twisted in translation into a red-baiting shocker. It is now playing on Broadway, starring Charles Boyer.)

Revolution Roadblock

Catholic Church in Hungary Biggest Obstacle to Reds

(Homer Bigart was ordered to leave Hungary Friday after a stay there of only two weeks.)

By Homer Bigart

Vienna, Dec. 11 (NYHT).—Of all the eastern European satellites of Russia, Hungary is perhaps the most depressing.

Started on the road to Asiatic socialism, the Hungarian still clings to the pathetic hope that communism somehow will be moderated by contact with the bourgeois charm of Budapest. He does not really believe it. He dreams more often of escape to the West or of a sudden Soviet collapse.

Many more nations would have to be submerged to compel the Hungarian to face the grim reality that freedom might involve his personal effort. And then he probably would say that freedom was only an illusion after all.

Today, Budapest is a showplace for Communists and fellow travelers arriving from the west for international congresses arranged under party auspices. There is plenty of good food and wine. Stores are filled with merchandise. Women are beautiful and well dressed. The plumbing works. Vaci Street, the local Fifth Avenue, boasts almost as many neon lights as the main stem of any third-class city in Italy.

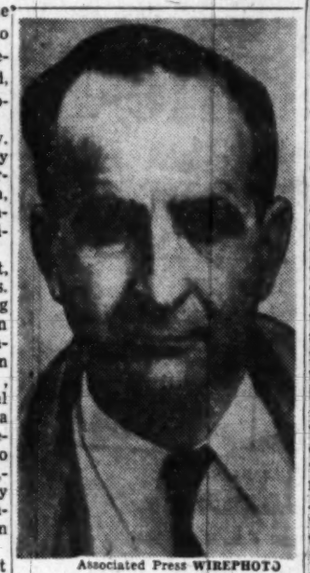
'Don Pepe' Figueres, Target of Invaders In Costa Rica, Was Educated in U. S.

Ten days ago President Jose Figueres of Costa Rica disbanded the little republic's tiny army and turned the barracks over to the school system.



Associated Press WIREPHOTO
JOSE FIGUERES Invaded

Armies are costly and create military cliques which tend to dominate the government, he declared. Besides, Figueres added, when danger threatens the people will rise to the occasion.

The occasion came quickly. Yesterday, an army sponsored by Dr. Rafael Calderon Guardia, former president of Costa Rica, moved in from adjoining Nicaragua, intent on overthrowing Figueres' armyless regime.

Back in 1942, when president, Calderon had exiled Figueres. Last spring, successfully revolting against the Calderonistas in power, Figueres returned the compliment. Apparently Dr. Calderon believes it is his turn again.

For many years the Central American Republic of Costa Rica has been regarded the model democracy among our neighbors to the south. The population of 800,000 was proud of its high literacy rate, and often boasted the country had more school teachers than soldiers. Revolts were rare.

Last spring one such revolt broke out when Calderon, candidate of the Ins, charged "fraud" after an election tribunal named Otilio Ulate, candidate of the Outs, as president-elect. Costa Rica's "lame duck" Congress upheld the fraud charge and nullified the election.

This action aroused a lot of Costa Ricans, among them "Don Pepe" Figueres, short, chubby, American-educated coffee grower and rope manufacturer. By his own account, "Don Pepe" started a revolution with seven shotguns and some festival rockets borrowed from a church. After five weeks of fighting, Figueres won the revolt, and was named head of a junta to run the country until 1950, when Ulate would be sworn in.

Figueres' revolt was a curious one. A wealthy landlord with more than 1000 sharecroppers and laborers working his plantations and factory, Figueres was a progressive-minded employer. He considered himself as a "farmer-Socialist," hated the professional military and politicians.

In 1942 Figueres became disgusted with the way Calderon was running the country and went on the air to say so. He was arrested as soon as he finished his speech, kicked out of the country. He spent a two-year exile in Mexico and was permitted to return to Costa Rica when Teodoro Picado, a member of the Ins, succeeded Calderon as President.

Figueres never could cotton to the Picado-Calderon government, charged that the government was playing too much ball with the Communist Party. When Fugueres undertook his revolt last spring, politically right Nicaragua came to the aid of Calderon; politically left Guatemala helped out the insurgents.

The rebels were outnumbered two to one by the government troops but civilian Figueres proved to be the best military tactician in the field. During the drawing up of peace terms, Figueres was referred to as "excellentissimo general. Figueres would have none of it. He was no general, he insisted just a leader of the people. He preferred to be called "Don Pepe."

Himself 42, Figueres is proud that his cabinet is made up of young men. The President neither smokes nor drinks, and eschews social gatherings.

A first-generation Costa Rican—his father, a physician, came from Spain—Senor Figueres studied engineering at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, learning English at the same time. He married a slender, dark-eyed Birmingham (Ala.) girl, Henrietta Boggs. They have two young children.

The boy is named after Jose Marti, Cuban patriot, whose life and works are admired by President Figueres. On the wall of "Don Pepe's" home hangs the picture of another idol: Abe Lincoln.

Canada Signs Province Pact

Ottawa, Dec. 11 (AP).—Canada and Newfoundland today signed an agreement admitting Newfoundland as the tenth province of the Dominion of Canada.

Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent signed for Canada. A. J. Walsh, chairman of the Newfoundland delegation that negotiated the terms, signed for Newfoundland.

Canada assumes Newfoundland's 63-million-dollar national debt, and becomes responsible for paying $42,750,000 cash grants and millions of dollars annually for services.

Newfoundland, Britain's oldest colony, has a population of about 325,000. It had dominion status until 1934, when it became a crown colony under a sort of bankruptcy arrangement with Britain.

Expenditures connected with United States military bases there during the war put it back on its feet and in two hard-fought plebiscites last June 3 and July 22 the populace voted to join Canada.

The agreement become effective probably March 31. It must be approved by the Canadian Parliament and Newfoundland government, and ratified by the British Parliament.

Reds Reach Tough Stage In Hungary

one would think they had never seen such technical progress west of the peoples' democracies. At the sight of a telephone in a hotel bedroom, they are apt to gasp, "What hath Rakosi wrought!" (Matyas Rakosi is the leader of Hungarian Communists.)

The moving streetcars, the colored porter at the Bristol, the solid stream of housewives passing well-stocked stalls at the people's market—in search of horsemeat—all convince the visitor that here democracy is succeeding gloriously and without any help from the enslaving Marshall Plan.

Last Wednesday, Ivan Boldiszar, an undersecretary of state, told correspondents it would be nice if they wrote a Christmas piece about the store windows and how jolly they looked. They should not, of course, mention the fact that nobody was buying, nor that the Hungarian custom of giving workers a Christmas bonus of one month's pay had just been abolished.

To send such dispatches abroad would be regarded as a violation of the law incriminating anyone who presents the people's democracy in an unfavorable light. Dr. Aurel Varannai, a Hungarian who was Budapest correspondent for the British news agency, Reuters, is serving eight months in prison for violating this law.

It would be far easier all around if Hungary had an open and direct censorship. It keeps the correspondent in constant fear of arrest (if he is Hungarian) or of sudden exnulsion if he is a foreigner.

The reason Hungary has no direct censorship is because the present regime wants to maintain for a while the pretty fiction of a free press. That was why the foreign ministry late yesterday denied this correspondent had been "expelled." No, he was simply "obliged to leave" because the police told him to be out of the country by midnight.

Rakosi, who runs Hungary, is a wise and cunning propagandist who knows that by avoiding sudden and dramatic police measures he can mislead at least the left sector of western opinion into believing that Hungary is developing her own brand of socialism.

He has had some success. The peasant has hardly been touched. None of the fifteen Roman Catholic bishops has been arrested. Between 200 and 300 priests, monks and nuns have been jailed, but so quietly and so few at a time that the news has been undramatic.

But now Rakosi must accelerate the revolution. Only the first stage—the seizure of political power—has been attained. The "opposition," consisting of the small Democratic People's Party and Father Balogh's Independent Democratic Party, is completely cowed.

Within the Communist-dominated coalition, a set of stooges from the once powerful Smallholders Party, led by former Premier Lajos Dinnyes, has been thrown out and replaced by a still more compliant set of stooges led by the new premier, Istvan Dobi, who is barely literate.

The second stage of the revolution—seizure of economic power—is just begun. It cannot succeed, even though industry has been nationalized, so long as agriculture is in the hands of the peasantry.

To wrest control from the peasantry, the state must press with all possible speed toward collectivization. The only way the regime can survive is by exporting even greater quantities of food, and the coming five-year plan, which will impose harsh burdens on the people, would collapse if the peasantry were not passive. Only by organizing the peasants into collectives can the regime be reasonably insured against passive resistance in the countryside.

The final stage is the seizure of ideological power, and here the regime faces its toughest adversary—the Catholic Church. Rakosi was forced into a premature showdown by Cardinal Mindszenty's implacable stand against nationalization of the schools. He is still trying desperately to find some way of removing the primate without sensational publicity abroad. Intense pressure is being put on the other bishops in the hope that they will intervene with the Vatican and persuade Pope Pius to summon Mindszenty to Rome.

If that fails there will be no alternative but to seize the cardinal, now virtually a prisoner in his palace at Esztergom, and clap him in jail. Already the people's court has been asked to prepare a case against the primate, charging him with attempting to subvert the democratic order of the state.

Meanwhile, there are almost daily demonstrations of "Catholic workers," staged by Communists, against the other bishops demanding that they refuse to read any further pastoral letters from the cardinal. The threat of arrest has effectively silenced most of the clergy.

Rakosi has cleverly effected a minor split in the lesser clergy, and his most useful instrument has been the dissident priest, Father Balogh, who argues that expedfency is preferable to valor and that it is all right if Cardinal Mindszenty wants to be a martyr but what about the six million Catholics who must go on living under communism?

In the battle of ideological power, the state already has begun an an intensive indoctrination of youth. "Cadres" of bright young peasants and sons of workers are sent to "people's colleges" where, in addition to the usual Communist dialectics, they are straightened out on the international situation.

During my all-too-brief stay in the people's republic, I asked Zoltan Vas, head of the supreme economic council, why the local press found it necessary to give so distorted a picture of the United States.

Vas replied: "It is necessary to teach our people to hate the United States so long as there is danger an honest answer. But there has of attack from the West." That was never been a time in history when mass hatred was not answered in kind.

Blockade-Proof Romeo Ruins Clink's Calm With 2-Love Life

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

"WIE GEHT'S?—Edward J. Lada talks with Ursula Schmidt

Berlin, Dec. 11 (AP).—Life for Edward J. Lada, blockade-busting Romeo, was complicated today by two loves in one jail.

Two Juliets visited the former paratrooper in the Army stockade, each claiming he hitchhiked from Paris to Berlin past Soviet guards for her.

Lada, facing a charge of illegal entry into Germany, had quite a time greeting both of them.

First he saw Ruth Riecki, mother of his 2-year-old daughter, Nancy. They spoke briefly and he fondled the baby with considerable fatherly affection.

Then Lada was allowed to go across the corridor to another visiting room. There he embraced 21-year-old Ursula Schmidt, blonde actress, who got out of bed in spite of pleurisy to visit him.

A soldier standing armed guard over prisoner Lada said sourly out of the side of his mouth:

"This used to be a quiet clink."

Lada was compelled to have separate interviews because both girls objected to being together.

Miss Schmidt called Lada "Chick" and he called her "Bootsie." When they parted, they kissed.

Lada completely reversed his story of last night when he said Ruth was his one and only. Today it was Bootsie.

Lada explained that he wanted "to do the right thing by Ruth and the baby, but all along it was Miss Schmidt he wanted to marry. He said he tried to take Ruth to the United States in 1947, but she was turned down because of a case of incipient tuberculosis. When he came back here several weeks ago, he tried to get a visa for Bootsie. That's when he was caught.

"They'll take me out of here in handcuffs and send me back to America," said Lada, which is a pretty good guess.

Said Ursula:

"Ruth would let him have the baby, but her relatives said no because then the CARE packages would stop."

Both girls wore fur coats, American nylon stockings and smart American-made shoes.

Ursula said she hoped the authorities wouldn't be too tough on Lada.

"He just can't say no, that's his trouble," she said.

staff in Germany, notified the Russians at that time that all American planes are properly marked.

Clay said today that "Russia's political intent (in imposing the blockade) has been made plain" and that the clear objective of the move is "to drive us out of Berlin, create instability and prevent recovery in Europe."

During the five months of the blockade, Clay said, "there have been no developments at the Berlin level to indicate that Russia seriously wanted a settlement here. There have been no evidences of good faith on the part of the Soviets here. I am not able to speak for what has gone on at Paris, Moscow and elsewhere."

Clay, who snapped, "We will not be bluffed" when the Russians first imposed the blockade, said today that he did not "believe war is just around the corner." He added that "there have been no indications in Berlin, in Germany, or in eastern Europe that Russia is building up her armed strength or making any unusual military preparations."

When asked in what form the Berlin issue is likely to enter its next critical stage, Clay said, "It cannot enter any further stage. It is a tense situation that will continue as long as the blockade lasts."

Clay remains calm, unruffled and unworried. "The real pressure of last summer is off," he said. He has advised Americans in Berlin that "anxiety or nervousness among Americans here is unbecoming."

The restrictions on mail, traffic and the elevated railway were imposed in western Berlin after last Sunday's election.

Britain Loses U. N. Fight For Middle East Military Base

Paris, Dec. 11 (AP).—Britain lost a behind-the-scenes fight at this U. N. Assembly session for approval of plans aimed at giving her a new military base in the Middle East.

She intends to resume it, however, next April when the General Assembly's third session meets again in New York.

Cirenaica, eastern segment of Italy's prewar colony of Libya, is the setting of a British War and Foreign Office project to create a forward Mediterranean base for air, land and sea forces.

Officials who help shape the London government's Middle Eastern policies said here today plans for the strategic development of the World War II battleground have been held up by the General Assembly's decision to defer study of the future of Italy's African empire—comprising the colonies of Libya, Eritrea and Somalia—until next April.

The decision was reached in the face of stiff British opposition this week.

Britain wants a strategic area trusteeship over Cirenaica so she can set up military installations. She would be prevented from doing so by the U. N. Charter if given an ordinary form of trusteeship.

The United States holds strategic area trusteeships over the former Japanese mandated Marshall, Caroline and Marianas Island groups.

U. S. backing for Britain's plans already has been pledged, officials of both countries have reported.

All the dominions—including nationalist South Africa—support them, too.

So do some Latin-American and west European countries, although many of them would prefer Italy to get administration of all her prewar colonies. This is what Russia and her supporters favor.

Dutch Break Off Indonesia Talks

The Hague, Dec. 11 (AP).—A decision to break off deadlocked Dutch-Indonesian peace talks was announced today by the Netherlands government.

Instead, the government said, Dutch authorities were going ahead with the establishment of an interim government to rule temporarily over all areas of Indonesia except those controlled by the republic.

The interim government is intended to rule until the projected United States of Indonesia becomes a full-pledged partner in the Dutch empire.

The peace talks have been going was ended by the Renville United Nations Good Offices Committee since the large-scale fighting on under supervision of a Truce last February.

An official statement said the Dutch delegation in Batavia has advised the Good Offices Committee that further talks with the republic are useless unless the Jogjakarta government changes its viewpoint radically.

No date was announced for the formation of the interim government, but previous official statements had mentioned January 1, 1949, as the deadline.

The Indonesian news agency, Antara, indicated republican leaders in Java would try to fix the blame for the breakdown on Dutch authorities.

Abdullah Warned on Annexation

Cairo, Egypt, Dec. 11 (U.P.)—Egypt and Syria warned Trans-Jordan's King Abdullah today that they are opposed to his annexing Arab Palestine.

King Farouk flatly informed diplomats from all Arab states except Trans-Jordan that he will not accept the unification of Palestine and Trans-Jordan under Abdullah's crown.

In Damascus, a foreign ministry spokesman criticized Abdullah for failing to inform Syria of his plan to annex Arab Palestine. The spokesman said Syria believed Palestine should first be liberated, then its people allowed to decide their future, a Damascus dispatch said.

Farouk, whose military leaders sponsor a separate Arab government in Giza, not far from the Egyptian border, said the demand for annexation to Trans-Jordan by Arabs at Jericho two weeks ago "does not constitute a decision by the Palestine people."

It was officially announced in Damascus that Emir Adel Arslan has not been able to form a cabinet after 11 days of negotiations with various political factions.

ing early today. But Manuilski determinedly strode to the rostrum and announced he wanted to discuss the Korean dispute in "detail."

As Manuilski droned on, the delegates wilted visibly. Evatt, who usually listens to every word of the debate, took off his earphones and slumped in his chair. Peter Fraser of New Zealand fell fast asleep. Manuilski protested this, but Fraser did not stir.

Only 145 spectators remained in the public galleries as Kisselev began.

The 83-day session was nearing an end with the cold war as intense as ever and the Berlin dispute still unsolved. Thoughts of the threat of a new war dominated the final speeches and statements of the delegates as they prepared to disperse until the Assembly reconvenes April 1 in New York.

Andrei Vishinsky of Russia, broadcasting over the U. N. radio, charged that the west has abandoned itself to war psychosis. He said the United States is encircling the Soviet Union with military bases.

Vishinsky said in his broadcast that attempts to blame Russia for world uneasiness lacked all foundation.

John Foster Dulles, acting head of the United States delegation, said increasing unity among the U. N. majority was acting as a deterrent to war. He appealed for an end to speculation over another world conflict.

Evatt rebuked the big powers for keeping the world in a turmoil. U. N. Secretary-General Trygve Lie asked the Big Four to end their cold war before the Assembly reconvenes.

Those who voted against creating the commission were Afghanistan, Cuba and Pakistan, plus the Arab states—Egypt, Syria, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Iraq and Yemen, and the six Slav bloc nations—Russia, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, White Russia and the Soviet Ukraine.

By its vote, the Assembly—

1. Established a three-member conciliation commission which will have its headquarters in Jerusalem.

2. Knocked out all references in the conciliation scheme to the U. N. partition plan which was approved November 29, 1947, and to the report drafted by the late Palestine mediator, Count Folke Bernadotte, proposing modifications of the partition plan.

3. Instructed the commission to take over the job of Acting Mediator Ralph Bunche and, if the Security Council asks it to, the truce machinery in the Holy Land.

4. Called upon the Jews and Arabs to work through the commission or by direct negotiations toward a settlement.

5. Instructed the conciliation commission to take steps to assist the Jews and Arabs to achieve a final settlement of all questions between them.

6. Declared that the holy places in Palestine, including Nazareth, should be protected and open to access.

7. Instructed the conciliation commission to draw up a detailed proposal for a permanent international regime for the Jerusalem area.

8. Decided that all refugees wishing to return to their homes and live at peace with their neighbors should be permitted to do so at the earliest practicable date and instructed the conciliation commission to maintain contacts with U. N. agencies in facilitating their return.

Envoys Ousted By Romania

British promised they would parachute arms and troops into Romania for anti-government forces in event of conflict.

The State Department denied all charges against the American diplomats. American Minister Rudolph E. Schoenfeld so informed Romania's woman Communist foreign minister, Anna Pauker, in a note delivered to her yesterday.

At the same time Schoenfeld said that "in conformity with usual international practice," the two Americans would be withdrawn. He labeled the charges against them ridiculous and contrary to fact.

The State Department press officer, Michael McDermott, announced yesterday that two of its top diplomats are personally unacceptable to the American Government. The American Government gave no reason for its action and McDermott said that the action was "without any connection and purely coincidental" with the Romanian moves against the two Americans in Bucharest.

This line was regarded here as diplomatic doubletalk merely to protect the Government against official charges from the Communist countries of a wholly retaliatory action.

The six foreign service men who thus got caught in a local skirmish of the East-West conflict are:

Americans—Henry P. Lieverich, a veteran foreign service officer and counselor of legation at Bucharest; Col. John R. Lovell, military attache at the legation.

Romanian—Grigore Preoteasa, minister counselor; Alexander Lazareanu, counselor of the legation in Washington.

Both the last two have been top men in the Romanian Embassy here. When Minister Michael Ralea went away on a long absence, Preoteasa was left in charge. State Department officials said that Preoteasa subsequently left this country and is still outside. Yesterday's announcement against him would have the effect of barring his return here, as it would also the return of Lazareanu once he leaves.

The trials that provided the background for the Communist attacks on the diplomats are regarded by State Department officials as being intended to smash internal political opposition. The latest of the trials was held October 22 to 31, with 12 Romanian business and professional men as defendants against charges of espionage, economic sabotage and treason in conspiracy with official representatives of the United States and Britain.

All the men were convicted, including a former industrial magnate, Max Ausnit, who was tried in absentia because he had fled to this country. Sentences of 15 years to life at hard labor were imposed.

having been compressed into a 5-square mile area.

Both trapped forces are being supplied by air drops. Reliable sources said these drops were very unsatisfactory, being hampered by Red antiaircraft fire and letting many supplies fall outside into Communist hands.

Eyeing this critical situation, the Chinese navy announced it had further increased its Yangtze River patrols against Communist infiltration. The Yangtze, 1 to 2 miles wide, is a strong barrier for Nanking on the south bank, but city officials were pushing new plans for local defense units.

In Shanghai, American and other foreign businessmen delayed decisions whether to leave as a result of Vice Admiral Oscar Badger's promise to place United States Marines there if needed.

(Although Admiral Badger stressed that the Marines would not intervene in the war or take over law enforcement, but would merely protect American lives and essential property, his words reassured the foreign community.)

In Hongkong, the antigovernment Marshal Li Chi-shen declared that landing Marines in Shanghai was "bound to result in antagonistic sentiment and acts" against Americans in China.

His statement on behalf of 10 antigovernment parties said use of Marines would be an infringement on Chinese sovereignty preventing Chinese-American relations being "properly readjusted for a long time to come."

12 Spy Hunt Documents Released by House Committee

Only One Among 'Pumpkin Papers' of Ex-Red Chambers

THE House Committee on Un-American Activities last night released 12 of the famous spy hunt documents, containing 21 diplomatic messages. The committee says it believes all the messages were filed during 1938.

Only one was among the "pumpkin papers" of former Communist courier Whittaker Chambers. It was reproduced from a microfilm. All the others were produced by Chambers in libel suit proceedings in Baltimore. They were in typewritten form, and some apparently were summaries of full documents. (In some cases the documents contained typographical errors, which the House Committee reproduced unchanged in making copies available to the press.)

The following is a handwritten memo, which committee records identified as being in the handwriting of Alger Hiss, former State Department official: "March 3, (Herschel V.) Johnson, U. S. Charge at London cabled that Lord Chatfield had told the naval attache that whether escalation was eventually decided or not, he would not change his plans for cruisers this year, and in any case, new battleships would not be laid down before the end of the current year."

Following is a report obtained by the committee from a Veterans Administration handwriting expert appraising the preceding document: To: Director, Inspection-Investigation Service. Date: December 6, 1948. From: Chief, Identification & Detection Division. EI/HJEG:ML. Subject: Handwriting examination of Hiss-Chambers case, No. 1749.

1. On this date, Mrs. Lillian E. Howard, representative of the Un-American Activities Committee, personally and informally submitted four photostatic copies of what appears to be handwritten notes identified as Q-1, Q-2 and Q-3. Mrs. Howard also submitted document identified as K-1, understood to bear the known writings of Alger Hiss. It is requested that the known writings of Alger Hiss appearing on K-1 be examined and compared with the questioned writings as they appear on exhibits marked Q-1, Q-2 and Q-3 to determine identity.

2. The writings above mentioned were carefully examined and compared and as a result of such a study, it is concluded that the person responsible for the writings appearing on exhibit K-1 purported to be known writings of Alger Hiss, also wrote the notes appearing in photostatic copies identified as Q-1, Q-2 and Q-3.

3. The evidence as submitted by Mrs. Howard was personally returned to her and the examination was made in her presence.

(Frank Pruit) Lockhart, United States Counselor of Embassy at Peiping, cabled that reports indicate that the Japanese are continuing preparations for advances southward along the Peiping-Hankow railway, and in Shansi. The number of Japanese troops going south on that railway has increased; the number of Japanese forces on the Taiyuan plain has been increasing; railway materials have been sent south, presumably for repair of the line destroyed south of Changteh; Japanese expeditions to cause the retirement of irregular forces west of the Peiping-Hankow railway and north and south of the Shikiachuang-Taiyuan railway have reportedly increased for the purpose of rendering flank attack against the Japanese more difficult. The Air Ministry hopes special consideration will be given by the appropriate American authorities for release for sale of these Boeing machines and other aircraft to be specified later.

Jan. 21 (Charles Alexander) Bay, United States Consul in Seville, cabled:

"Political optimism described in my December 7 has been rudely shaken by events of Teruel. Moral effect of the loss of that city far outweighs military significance but ultimate liquidation of the affair is expected by operation now developing. Information received from widely separated sources indicates General Franco was on the point of launching a drive on Guadalajara to take off from Jadraque with intention of completing encirclement of Madrid when attacked at Teruel. These circumstances are generally regarded as merely delaying final victory.

"Tightening of frontiers which still continues is attributed to plot against Franco. Information from German sources is to the effect that a number of civilians were recently executed in this connection at Caceres. Methods of granting leaves to members military forces has been revised and restricted. Masters and crews of foreign merchantmen are not permitted to go ashore in Seville exception being made for ships of nations having relations with General Franco.

Austria, Germany

Feb. 16. Wiley, United States Charge at Vienna, cabled the Cabinet changes approved by Miklas the preceding night, adding that he was informed through official sources that the German government had demanded action on its requests by midnight and had staged an impressive military demonstration along the frontier.

Feb. 14 (Prentiss Bailey) Gilbert, U. S. Charge at Berlin, cabled that Hemmen, former German counsellor of embassy at Buenos Aires and the negotiator of the Canadian-German commercial agreement of 1935 and the German-French agreement of 1937 and now in the economic section of the foreign office, was being sent to the United States. He would travel around securing economic information and would be available after the signature of the U. S.-British trade agreement to discuss possibilities of negotiating a trade agreement between Germany and the United States.

Feb. 17. (Ambassador William) Phillips cabled from Rome that Ciano said that while the inclusion of Seyss-Inquart in the cabinet meant "a pronounced increase of German influence in Austria he nevertheless felt that it was far better to have cooperation between the two governments since any increase of Austrian opposition or hostility to Germany might of itself be an invitation to Hitler to take some drastic step. Ciano also told me that there would be very much closer cooperation between the German and Austrian armies and that during the next year there would be an exchange of high ranking officers between the two armies."

Feb. 18. Gilbert, U. S. Charge at Berlin:

"The military attache reports that as a result of numerous conversations and discussions with army sources he is convinced that the agreement reached with Austria as a result of the Hitler-Schuschnigg conversations contains military clauses providing for the gradual 'assimilation' of the Austrian army into the German.

"Presumably this military agreement covers: (1) unification of tactical doctrine through adoption of similar textbooks, (2) Austrian adoption of German military organization, (3) gradual introduction of uniform weapons, (4) coordination of war plans.

"The military attache believes that within the relatively near future there will be evidence of a military alliance through the appointment of standing military missions by each country to the other country.

"As a corollary of the foregoing it is believed here that further changes in the Austrian government will be announced shortly which will include the appointment of a 'pro-German' chief of staff of the Austrian army."

JAPAN. On March 30 the department cabled to the United States legations at Costa Rca and at Panama:

"The department has learned from a presumably reliable source that certain Japanese have approached the E. W. Creevy Trading Co. with respect to the possible purchase of a manganese mine said to be owned by that company on Cocos Island."

March 31. The United States Legation at Panama replied:

"Neither of Creevys in Panama since December nor has shown active interest in Panama manganese although reported developing Guanacaste, Costa Rica, deposits. No manganese deposits or Creevy interest in Costa Rican Cocos Island heard of in presumably informed sources in Panama but confirmation by the legation at San Jose is suggested.

"Creevys reputedly capable of such deal or of publicising fictitious foreign offer for promotion purchases." April 1. United States Legation at San Jose, Costa Rica, cabled that there were no manganese deposits on Cocos Island, that the Creevys had available 4000 tons of the Guanacaste coast of Cocos Bay. March 31. The Fourth Regiment of United States Marines stationed at Peiping (?) cabled that one regular Japanese division had recently been transferred from central China to Japan. March 23. United States Consul at Dairen in a cable referring to commercial treatment of American products stated that a few days before a permit entry had been granted for 1000 American motor trucks purchased by the authorities in Hsinking."

My telegram February 12, 9 P. M.

Dined last night at a large dinner given by Schmidt with Chancellor Schuschnigg, Seyss-Inquart, members of the government and diplomatic corps. Atmosphere most oppressive. To French Minister Schuschnigg described visit to Berchtesgaden as the most horrible day of his life. He says that Hitler undoubtedly a madman with a mission and in complete control of Germany. Hitler openly told him of his desire to annex Austria and declared that he could march into Austria with much greater ease and infinitely less danger than he incurred in remilitarization of the Rhineland. Schuschnigg admits that appointment of Seyss-Inquart is highly dangerous but states that he will make it in order to avert the "worst." In respect of Italy, Schuschnigg declared that he can count only on moral not material support.

Schuschnigg is attempting to make best of bad situation and was in a long and friendly conversation with Seyss-Inquart. Hornbostel is in utter despair and states openly that there is nothing left for him to do but to leave foreign office.

Italian Minister claims that he was informed of Berchtesgaden meeting only on the eleventh and denied that Italy took any initiative in the matter. He telegraphed full information to Mussolini. Latter, however, is engaged in winter sports and up to last night Ghigi had no information that his messages had reached the Duce. Italian Minister gives anxious impression.

Papal Nuncio admits that Seyss-Inquart may be good Catholic but fears nevertheless that it is the beginning of the end.

The French Minister, who has been here five years, states that this is the most critical moment since July 1934. "It is not the end." In his opinion Austria can only be saved by immediate reconciliation of France and England with Italy and energetic joint act. Enderrs, author of May constitution made identical remark this morning.

In my opinion Austria's situation is most unfortunate and menacing. If Seyss-Inquart is loyal his appointment would not be a solution. If he is disloyal it is a catastrophe. Germany probably plans gradual danzigfication and any unsupported efforts of Schuschnigg may make to outmaneuver Seyss-Inquart can at best only retard this process.

Repeated by telegraph to Paris, London, Berlin and Rome.

WARSAW, No. 38, March 29, 4 p. m.

"One. I learn following in strictest confidence from Beck and his associates:

"(a) Beck gained distinct impression in conversations with Mussolini and Ciano during Beck's recent Rome visit that they both shared Beck's view in respect to Danubian Valley: Whereas Italy focused its attention on the Mediterranean and Poland on the Baltic neither would like to see the hegemony of any country develop further in the Danubian Valley.

"(b) Of pertinent interest moreover during the adjournment of Anglo-Italian conversations Mussolini had recently pointed out Italy was fundamentally interested in ascertaining the extent to which Britain would be interested in doing something to bring about economic and other appeasement in that area which has been disturbed by recent events (such as Austria). My informants added that in other words Mussolini's soundings on this score indicated Mussolini's interest in embarking on a potential counter policy vis a vis Germany's suspected aspirations in Danubian Valley; the counter policy envisaging economic assistance to rescue the Danubian and Balkan states from being swept into the German camp.

"Two. My informants added their opinion that Britain would probably be inclined to leave treatment of this problem in abeyance until current obstacles still retarding an Anglo-Italian solution of the problem in Spain will have been eliminated."

Strictly Confidential for the Secretary.

THE Austrian minister just read to me a telegram which he received this morning from Schuschnigg. It indicated that Schuschnigg had by no means given up hope of maintaining Austrian independence.

Schuschnigg had confidence that Seyss-Inquart, although a Pan-German, would not work in an underhand manner for the introduction of Nazis into the regime.

Amnesty would be extended at once not only to Nazis but also to Social Democrats. This amnesty would, however, not include those who had emigrated from Austria thus excluding from the country all those Austrian Nazis who are now in Germany.

The right to conduct political propaganda would be extended not only to the Nazis, but also to the Monarchists and Social Democrats. Those Nazis who had been excluded from office and pensions because of their political opinions would have their pensions restored but would not be given their former offices.

The position of Schuschnigg was, I gathered, the following: That he would continue to struggle for Austrian independence; that he believed this independence could be maintained in the long run only if there should be reconciliation between England, France, and Italy, that he considered recognition of Ethiopia essential for any such reconciliation since the Italians were genuinely convinced that the British at some future date would attempt to drive the Italians out of Ethiopia which would mean the collapse of the Fascist regime in Italy.

Section two. Schuschnigg felt that the actions which he was about to take would produce a temporary breathing period but in the end would prove to be just as unsatisfactory to Hitler as his actions which followed the accord of July, 1936. He expected therefore that at some future date Germany would attempt again to repeat the Berchtesgaden coup and would mobilize if necessary on the Austrian frontier. He would make no further concessions. He could not attempt to fight Germany alone and if faced by German mobilization would have to resign.

THE question of Austrian existence as an independent state therefore depended on the possibility that before Hitler again should become sufficiently irritated to mobilize on the Austrian frontier there might be reconciliation between England, France and Italy and an agreement between those states to support Austrian independence.

The Austrian minister added that he believed the extension of amnesty to the Social Democrats would add greatly to the strength of Schuschnigg's regime as the Social Democrats would be the strongest opponents of a gradual Nazification of Austria.

In contradiction of the opinions expressed above with regard to Seyss-Inquart I was told this morning by a gentleman who says he knows Seyss-Inquart intimately that the latter is a hundred per cent Nazi by conviction although a devout Catholic and that he will inser Nazis gradually into all vital posts and strike for a decision in a few months.

One. My British colleague who talks to me freely and so far as I can judge frankly, has told me of the following conversation with the Minister for Foreign Affairs on February 9 which would appear to be significant owing to the marked change in the minister's usually placid, courteous and friendly bearing. The fact that for the first time in our respective dealings with him Hirota twice lost his temper with Craigie might be due to nervousness engendered by the strain of the current sessions of the Diet or the mounting irritation at the tone, insistence and volume of Craigie's continual representations both oral and written in connection with British interests in China or perhaps to both. The minister's demeanor tends to confirm reports which have come to both Craigie and myself that Hirota is steadily becoming harder and more intransigent as regards foreign interests in the Far East and that it is Hirota rather than Suetsugu who leads the ultra chauvinistic element in the government. I myself have as yet seen no outward demonstration of any change of attitude on Hirota's part as regards American interests.

Two. The conversation referred to arose when Craigie informed the minister that he is in possession of evidence indicating that Japanese forces have occupied several of the smaller Chinese islands in the general vicinity of Hong Kong and again asked for specific assurances that the statements of the Japanese government that it has no territorial designs in China apply as well to the islands as to the mainland. According to Craigie the minister in some instances in their intercourse became very angry, inveighed against the continual British demands for renewed assurances, said that under present war conditions Japan had given all the assurances that can reasonably be expected, and asserted that if the warfare is prolonged Japan may be forced to occupy more territory whether insular or on the mainland. If the warfare becomes permanent, said Hirota, the occupation will also be permanent. Referring specifically to Hainan, Hirota said that the Japanese could not possibly give a permanent pledge not to occupy. Craigie pointed out that whereas Hong Kong cannot be regarded as a threat to Japan the occupation of these islands by Japanese forces does constitute a very real threat to Hong Kong. The general tone of this conversation appears to have been acrimonious.

Three. Craigie is aware that there are large concentration of Japanese troops in Formosa (see our 61, January 31, 6 p. m.) and of Japanese ships in the port of Takao and he believes that an attack on Canton or some other point in South China is impending.

Four. Craigie's general reaction to this conversation with Hirota is that the longer the warfare is prolonged the greater will be the likelihood of permanent occupation by Japan not only of the islands but of territory on the mainland. He believes that Japanese assurances of "no territorial designs" are likely to be withdrawn at short notice. These prospects so seriously concern British interests that he contemplates recommending or has already recommended to his government (2) that continued support of Chiang Kai-shek, whether by furnishing war supplies and funds or otherwise, is detrimental to British interests and (b) that the British government should be alert to foster any outlook for peace negotiations which might leave to China any hope of eventual resurrection.

Five. Craigie is informed and believes that it was the Japanese industrialists and politicians and not the military who favored and brought about the withdrawal of recognition from the central government.

Six. I think that the nature of the conversation reported above indicates that our own practice of concentrating our representations to the minister on important issues and with discreet timing is likely to prove more effective than the British practice of constant hammering by almost daily notes, letters and other communications with continual personal visits to the minister or the vice minister both on important and routine issues. The British procedure appears to be based on the theory that constant hammering will wear away a stone but in the present temper of the Japanese government and military this practice is liable to defeat its own object through the irritation which it inevitably engenders, clearly demonstrated in Craigie's last interview with the minister. The representations of the American Government are at least listened to with respect and an evident inclination on the part of the foreign office to meet our wishes so far as the military can be influenced in that direction.

Seven. About two weeks ago Craigie told me that he had heard from a trustworthy source that there was to be a change for the better in the Japanese attitude toward Great Britain and that press and other agitation toward the British was to be discontinued. I did not put much stock in Craigie's information. Since then General Matsui in the interview which he gave to Woodhead sharply criticized the British for trying to create political issues out of the problem of preserving British economic and commercial interests in China while the Japanese press has expressed the conviction that it was Great Britain which initiated the three-power demarche with regard to naval construction. The feeling in Japan against the British is not in our opinion altogether artifically created as Craigie believes it to be but flows from the conviction that the British are constantly endeavoring to establish a common front against Japan in order to preserve British political and economic interests in the Far East.

March 26. (Arthur Bliss) Lane, United States Minister at Belgrade cabled:

"MINISTER of war restated to me yesterday that construction of Yugoslav fortifications on German frontier which was initiated prior to Anschluss is proceeding. Yugoslav government now evincing active interest in coming to agreement with Standard Vacuum Oil Co. respecting duty on crude oil due to military necessity of gasoline reserves. General Maric discounted importance of recent incidents in northern part of the country attributing them to local political rather than to international causes.

"Assistant minister for foreign affairs said to me this morning that general European situation appears calmer; that Hitler will not attack Czechoslovakia realizing that such action would lead to general coalition against Germany, and that war will probably be averted for two years at least."

U. S. Losing Anti-Red Fight By Vacillation, Welles Says

Rochester, N. Y., Dec. 11 (U.P.)—Former Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles today said the United States is waging a losing fight against communism by vacillating between two foreign policies while Russia persistently sticks to one well laid plan.

Welles, speaking before the Rochester Institute of International Affairs, criticized America for seeking world security both as a Nation acting alone and as a member of the United Nations.

He scored what he said was too much control by the military of United States foreign affairs, declaring:

"Every major issue of foreign policy is now being decided by the National Security Council. Of the Council's seven members, one has been a professional soldier throughout his long life of devoted and distinguished service to his country, and of the remaining members, all but one speak for and in the name of the armed services.

"We have every reason to fear that even though actual war may be averted, the United States will be engaged in a losing fight unless American foreign policy becomes the instrument of a democracy which is quite as dynamic as communism . . ."

Welles said the United States Government frequently has stated its determination to strenghten the U. N. and said that the U. N. represents the very foundation of American foreign policy. Yet, he added, this determination has been more often evidenced in words than in action.

"The truth is that there exists in Washington a powerful school of thought that maintains that two parallel policies should be carried on," he said. "The one, a policy of lip service to the United Nations; the other, a policy which seeks national strategic advantage."

Welles said the principal issues on which United States has vacillated are the Palestine war, the cold war in Germany and the Chinese civil war.

natories could build above treaty limits if a nonsignatory was found to be doing so.

Announced Treaty Departure

Hull wrote that on February 5, 1938, the United States asked Japan for assurances that she was not building beyond treaty limits and failed to get them. Consequently, he wrote, the United States announced after consultations with signatory powers, that it intended departing from treaty limitations.

The memorandum released yesterday apparently summarized a conference on this matter at which Lord Chatfield, then First Sea Lord (corresponding to the United States Chief of Naval Operations), revealed Britain's intention, for the time being, not to go beyond the 1936 treaty limitations. This could have been very valuable information slightly more than a year before Britain was to become involved with Germany (then allied with Russia) in history's greatest war.

Only one of the documents released yesterday was made from microfilm concealed by Chambers in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm and turned over to the committee 10 days ago. This was a copy of a message transmitted to the State Department January 13, 1938, by Col. Frank Dorn, then observing the Japanese occupation of Tsingtao. It described movements and equipment of the Japanese forces and was forwarded by Samuel Sokobin, then an embassy aide at Tsingtao.

No Information of Value

Colonel Dorn, now assistant commandant at the Armed Forces Information School at Carlisle Barracks, Pa., told The Washington Post yesterday the message had been transmitted from Tsingtao in Navy code. He said it contained no information of value to another nation but could have been used as a code-breaking key.

All of the documents released were checked by the State Department and cleared as containing no present threat to security. Failure of the department to clear one document submitted to it led to a charge by Representative Nixon (R., Calif.), a committee member, that it was being held up for political reasons.

It was understood from another source that the document in question reveals that Hull opposed following up President Roosevelt's 1937 "quarantine the aggressors" speech. It is understood to reveal that then Undersecretary Sumner Welles went to Mr. Roosevelt, who overruled his Secretary of State and directed that the firmness implied in the speech be carried into diplomatic relations.

Nixon said he was going to "insist" that this document be made public along with the others. He added that it "reflects only the fact that the major consideration of foreign policy in 1937 and 1938 was the effect that it would have on the 1940 election."

Could Have Caused Trouble

Others among the documents released yesterday could readily have had serious international repercussions had they got into the wrong hands at the time. These included:

1. A "rush" message from Consul General John C. Wiley at Vienna, dated February 15, 1938, describing a dinner at which he talked with then Austrian Chancellor Schuschnigg. Schuschnigg, who was endeavoring to prevent absorption of his country into the Reich, was quoted as terming Adolf Hitler "undoubtedly a madman with a mission." Wiley said Schushnigg described a a recent visit to Hitler at his Berchtesgaden retreat as "the most horrible day of his life."

2. A "strictly confidential" message from Joseph C. Grew, Ambassador to Japan, quoting the British Ambassador and dated February 12, 1938. Grew said the British Ambassador described continued support of Chiang Kai-shek as "detrimental to British interests."

3. A message indicating that the British, in January, 1938, were about to ask the U. S. to release 12 B-17 Flying Fortresses for sale to them, to be followed by orders for other combat aircraft.

To Appear Before Grand Jury

Nixon announced yesterday that he would appear Monday with the Chambers microfilms before a grand jury investigating charges of Soviet espionage. He said he would try to find out at the same time when witnesses now under Justice Department subpena would be made available to appear before the Un-American Activities Committee.

A committee official revealed during the day that at least one photographer, with a "known Communist background," believed to have microfilmed some of the documents, had been located near New York and probably would testify this week. This official said another photographer, who lived at one time in Baltimore, was being sought.

He said efforts to locate a typewriter on which some of the pilfered documents were copied was "making progress." He described this evidence as promising to be "one of the most fascinating disclosures" yet to be made in the long espionage investigations of the committee.

New York Grand Jury to See Microfilms in Red Spy Probe

New York, Dec. 11 (AP).—Microfilms of Government documents hidden by Whittaker Chambers in a pumpkin on his farm were to be brought here over the weekend for scrutiny of the Federal grand jury.

As the jury concluded a Saturday session, United States Attorney John F. X. McGohey announced that the House Un-American Activities Committee had authorized the move.

The committee and the Justice Department have been in a tug-of-war over the films which the jurors will examine Monday.

McGohey said the jury would meet nights, if necessary, to complete its work by Wednesday, its expiration date.

Representative Richard M. Nixon (R., Calif.), a House committee member, said in Washington he would bring the films here himself.

The jury today heard three of the former Government officials accused by Chambers of supplying him the documents for delivery to Russian agents.

Pigman Issues Denial

One, William Ward Pigman of Appleton, Wis., a onetime chemist in the U. S. Bureau of Standards, appeared for the first time.

After testifying, Pigman issued a statement in which he said: "I categorically deny that I have ever had any dealings with Whittaker Chambers or that I ever knew the man.

"I further unqualifiedly deny that I have ever given to Chambers or to any other person any unauthorized governmental information. I am now appearing before the grand jury and have answered all questions put to me."

His brother, George Pigman, also was a surprise witness. Government officials would not say anything about him except that he, too, once worked for the Government.

The other two targets of Chambers' accusations who testified today were Alger Hiss, former State Department official and a witness before the jury all week, and Henry J. Wadleigh, also a onetime State Department worker. Chambers also was on hand at the grand jury room.

Hiss has denied all of Chambers' accusations. Wadleigh refused to tell the Un-American Activities Committee whether he had given Government documents to anyone for delivery to Soviet spies.

Time is running out for the present grand jury, which last summer indicted 12 top Communist Party officials on conspiracy charges.

Its term expires Wednesday. A panel for another jury has been called for the following day. However, one Government source has said the Chambers-Hiss phase of the present inquiry will be concluded by Wednesday.

McGohey did not say whether the jurors had seen any of the Chambers documents previously. It had been believed they had, because several House committee investigators have appeared before the jury carrying parcels.

However, the United States Attorney did make plain that he was interested not only in the contents of the films but in some dates. In a telegram to Nixon confirming the agreement with the committee to bring the films here, McGohey said there had been published reports indicating conflicting statements "to your committee as to date of manufacture of said films.

"It is crucial that true facts as to this and contents of films be determined at once by grand jury."

Dispute Goes On

When the films turned up last week, Chambers said they had been taken in 1937 and 1938.

Alex Campbell, Assistant Attorney General, issued a statement here reflecting the sharp disagreement about conduct of the espionage probe which has developed between the Justice Department and the House committee.

"The committee since last Tuesday has promised the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the New York grand jury to produce these films," Campbell said.

"It is hoped that this time the films will be produced so that the grand jury may promptly proceed with its investigation."

Henry H. Collins, jr., one of the men named by Chambers last summer as leaders of "Communist cells" in Washington, tonight issued a statement saying he had "categorically denied" before the New York grand jury last Wednesday all of Chambers' accusations.

Collins' appearance Wednesday had not been made public.

Collins refused to answer questions before the House committee in connection with Chambers' accusations.

Describing himself as head of the American-Russian Institute, Collins said tonight he "was quite willing to answer questions before the grand jury."

Consumer Incomes Reach Record High

By The Associated Press

Consumer incomes smashed through to another record high in October, the Commerce Department said yesterday. Also, a report on employment in November gave indication that total earnings are continuing at high tide.

The Commerce Department's business economics office said that consumer incomes attained an annual rate of $215,600,000,000 in October—a 900 billion dollar rise over the previous records of August and September.

A Census Bureau report, meanwhile, put November employment at a record total of 59,893,000 for that month, topping November of last year by 1,298,000.

These showings of a heavy flow of cash to consumers made the November and early December lag in department store sales below last year's records seem strange indeed—unless:

(1) Price resistance by American shoppers has become the strongest influence in the sales picture—or (2) shoppers are going back this year to the prewar habit of buying at the "last minute."

A pickup in Christmas buying in the latest reported period—the first half of last week—pushed sales then up to about last year's level. This may indicate a weakening in buyer resistance that will continue in the 11 shopping days remaining.

Whether or not living costs were so high as to cut down ability to buy Christmas gifts, the jingle of money flowing to consumers was loud and clear. There was some shifting in the kinds of consumers it was going to, however.

As compared to average rates for the first 10 months of this year, the October income figures showed farmers, in particular, were getting less of it. So were landlords and persons owning their own business, though their income increased, too, in October.

On the other hand, wage and salary workers—particularly factory and construction workers and miners—were getting more, as were stock and bond owners. Veterans's bonus receipts from State governments were down. So were compensation payments to the unemployed.

Even though the overall annual income rate hit a new peak in October, Commerce Department economists noticed a slowdawn in the total income increase from the high-speed rise in mudsummer.

Scattered reports accumulated of industrial worker layoffs as supplies caught up with demand. But retail stores—among the trade occupations—boosted employment by expanding sales forces for the Christmas season.

Yule Parties Start Tuesday

Senator Alben W. Barkley, Vice President-elect of the United States, and the Most Rev. Patrick A. O'Boyle, Archbishop of the Washington Archdiocese, will join this week in sending off the annual round of Christmas parties.

Both are scheduled to address the yearly pre-Christmas meeting of the Washington Board of Trade, to be held at 8 p. m. Tuesday in the main ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel.

The meeting will also hear a presentation of the traditional music of Christmas by the Sulpician seminary choir of Catholic University. The 35-man choir, composed of students for the priesthood, will offer two 15-minute periods of carols and anthems, including a "Christmas Around the World" carol.

Senator Barkley and Archbishop O'Boyle will be making their first appearances before the Board of Trade. The meeting will be presided over by Leon Chatelain, jr., president. Buffet refreshments will follow.

Today, two Christmas functions will be held, with numerous others slated for the remainder of the week.

The annual Christmas glee club concert of Dunbarton College of Holy Cross, 2935 Upton st. nw., will be held in the college auditorium at 8 p. m. today.

Under direction of Sister Cecilia Mary, C. S. C., the glee club will present a program of carols, folk songs and hymns.

The International Geneva Association of hotel, club and restaurant executives and employes will hold its annual Christmas dance from 9 p. m. to 1 a. m. at the National Press Building, 14th and F sts. nw.

Christmas Turkey Price Up; 95 cts. to $1 Pound Predicted

Greater Washington providers who looked askance at Thanksgiving prices of around 75 cents a pound for small-family turkeys should brace their drumsticks for a Christmas shock.

It looks like 95 cents to $1 a pound for apartment sized birds for the holiday, and they're going to be scarce, poultry dealers predict.

Wholesale turkey prices have gone up 10 to 14 cents a pound since the November holiday, according t Fred Kolker, chairman of the poultry division of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, who believes we haven't seen anything yet.

Dealers say there is little profit for them, or for retailers, at current prices, but the turkey farmers are doing fine.

Several reasons are cited for the rising prices, most of them leading to a short supply, while demand continues high, according to poultrymen.

The increasing population of the Western sections of the country eats up some of the turkeys which used to come East, and local production isn't high enough yet, the dealers say. About 70 per cent of the local gobblers were sold out for Thanksgiving, and many hen turkeys are being held back for breeding.

The result is that dealers are bidding against each other for turkeys which cost—according to one local grower, Stuart Hilton of Culpeper, Va.—about 31 cents a pound to produce.

Happier news for the housewife is the lower cost of eggs, which have dropped as much as 12 cents a dozen in some chain stores during the past week. This reflects a wholesale decrease here of about 4 cents in the last three weeks, with another similar drop scheduled by many dealers on Monday.

The decline is regarded by most wholesalers as seasonal, due to the usual higher production at this time of year. Some retailers have noted a slight drop in demand.

Reform Is Sought In House Rules

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

A move to clip the "undemocratic" power of the House Rules Committee on the opening day of the Eighty-first Congress last night was disclosed by Representative Herman P. Eberharter (D., Pa.) assistant House Democratic Whip.

Eberharter, in a "nonpartisan" letter to all members of the new Congress, proposed to end the House Rules Committee practice of pigeonholing bills favorably reported by other committees by changing the House rules at the outset of the session.

Long Overdue, He Says

"A reform in this undemocratic system is long overdue," Eberharter wrote Republican as well as Democratic members.

"In theory the Rules Committee is a traffic director of the legislative highway, determining the order of business on the floor of the House. In practice, this committee has become an obstruction to orderly traffic. The committee often allows bills to come before the House only on its own terms."

Eberharter solicited suggestions from members to restore majority rule on all reported bills in the House and announced formation of an informal committee to sponsor an amendment in both major party caucuses and on the House floor.

Could Introduce Own Rule

Eberharter's plan, a variation of several that are being quietly espoused by Republicans as well as Democrats in the House, would enable the chairman or member of any House committee favorably reporting legislation to introduce its own rule for consideration of the bill.

The "rule" would then be referred to the House Rules Committee, which could continue to recommend priority and length of debate. If the rules group failed to act within a specified period, however—say two to three weeks—a privileged motion would be in order in the House.

Thus a majority of the whole House, and not merely 6 or 7 members of the 12-man Rules Committee, would have the final authority to decide what bills would be voted on.

A slight variation of the same plan has been recommended by Representative A. S. (Mike) Monroney (D., Okla.), coauthor of the congressional reorganization act. Monroney suggested that the Rules Committee be required to report favorably or unfavorably to the House within a specified time on all bills approved by the regular legislative committees.

In another slight departure, Representative Christian A. Herter of Massachusetts, himself a Republican member of the Rules Committee, has proposed that the rules group be required to report favorably within a given time all legislation reported by the legislative committees.

What helped focus attention on the Rules Committee was the apparent fact that when the Democrats take over no prospective appointments to the 12-member committee alone will change the threat of stalemate.

Could Tie Up Program

Thus, two ultra-conservative Democratic members of the committee, Representatives E. E. Cox (Ga.), and Howard W. Smith (Va.), if four Republican members vote with them, could tie up housing, Federal aid to education, social security or any other item in the Truman program.

To remedy this, Representative Adolph Sabath (D., Ill.), incoming chairman of the committee, recently suggested an increase in the committee's membership from 12 to 13, with nine to four Democratic majority.

Eberharter wrote members, however, that changes in personnel of the committee would not affect the basic problem or effect even "a temporary cure."

"The problem is not so much the composition of the committee, as the function is has exercised in reviewing and vetoing the substance of bills reported by the other committees," the Pennsylvania Democrat said.

"Any authority exercised by a few members that can be used to block the desire of a majority, even to bring up a bill for general debate, assumes that the membership of the House does not have the collective good judgment to pass or reject the legislation . . ."

Eberharter's letter to other members read in part:

"Implicit in the American form of democratic government is the proposition that a majority of the Congress shall enact the laws. Yet a practice has grown up in the House of Representatives which enables a few men sitting on the Rules Committee effectively to thwart the will of a majority of the House. This has happened time and again, and the Eighty-first and succeeding Congresses will be no exception if we can judge by the past . . .

"Congress is constantly engaged in a struggle for the respect of the people. The people never have been and never will be able to understand how the will of a majority of the House . . . can be set aside by the judgment of a few men on a powerful committee.

"The spectacle of a legislative committee unable to bring a bill to the floor after favorable recommendations based on careful hearing and consideration, because members of the Rules Committee do not favor that bill on its merits, adds nothing to the merits of the democratic process. The cumbersome, time-consuming discharge petition is, as a practical matter, fairly useless to cope with this problem.

"This basic contradiction of democratic government has been studied by parliamentary experts and legislative draftsmen, and a draft of an amendment to the House Rules will be ready for consideration when the Eighty-first Congress convenes January 3.

"It is at this time that the proponents of majority rule must strike their blows against the dictatorship of the Rules Committee. They must be prepared to offer at precisely the right moment . . . an amendment to the rules depriving the committee of its broad powers to block consideration of, or to demand changes in, legislation, and limiting the committee to the task of scheduling legislative debate on the floor.

"This amendment would then become the pending business of the House, open to full debate on the floor and not subject to reference to the Rules Committee. The change would become effective if approved by a majority of the House.

"This proposal is completely nonpartisan. Its adoption should still permit the Rules Committee to schedule the priority of debate in the House, but should enable the House membership, after a reasonable opportunity for the Rules Committee to act, to call up any measure for consideration by majority vote.

"Unless the amendment carries on opening day, its chances are slim, for it will be referred to the Committee on Rules, where it would doubtless be buried . . ."

"Move over, Fido"

What to do . . .?

the day after election. Chairman Howard Kacy's congressional relations committee has been preparing this service for the past two election years.

The committee sent letters to every new Congressman and Senator offering a helping hand on their housing problems and asking for information on what they would like.

"We then asked the full cooperation of the Washington Real Estate Board, Home Builders' Association, Builders, Managers and Property Owners Association, Washington Hotel Association and all the local real-estate agencies," Koones explained.

"And we surely are getting it. The housing people are coming through beautifully in channeling to us what they think would be suitable housing."

Present Housing Picture

Most first requests are for furnished apartments, preferably within walking distance of the Capitol, renting for not more than $150 a month.

Forty-three legislators of the 134 queried said they would like help. As of yesterday her records showed that 23 of them had been successful in getting quarters. Fifteen of those placed wound up in rented apartments, of which about one half were furnished. The other eight will be living in houses, most of which are furnished.

Monthly rent bill for these new residents will range from $125 to $250 for apartments and $125 to $350 for houses.

Further checks with Congressmen and real estate agencies where many members are dealing directly reveal that about 50 per cent of all new legislators already have located some place to live.

In addition, the housing committee has helped produce accommodations for some 20 congressional aides.

Chuckles and Troubles

In any job dealing with such personal problems as housing there are chuckles as well as troubles. And Mrs. Muchmore is getting both.

"Mr. Congressman, you name it and we may have it," Mrs. Muchmore says. "I have two listings I particularly like. One is a house with accommodations for eight, but in a pinch could easily take care of nine. It has a heated doghouse!"

The other is an estate in Virginia which would be just the thing for a Congressman who likes horses. The landlord has a horse, which he insists is a very fine animal, that goes with the house.

Toughest current headache is the plight of Congressman Thomas Burke (D., Ohio). When he comes from Toledo it will be with five children. He's made one unsuccessful stab at finding a roof for his family and is now back in Toledo hoping that something will turn up.

Freshman Congressman Foster Furcolo, Democrat from Springfield, Mass., probably will have a much happier Christmas holiday. He came to Washington right after election, checked in with the Board of Trade and went home the following night with a signed lease on a house. He was the first Congressman placed by the housing committee this year.

Chairman Koones and Mrs. Muchmore have five housing hints which, they emphasize, will help both the homeless and their community effort:

1. If you are looking for a house, come to Washington yourself or designate a person here who has full authority to look over and decide upon accommodations that will be satisfactory.

2. If you cannot come to Washington, send the congressional housing subcommittee the most detailed information on what you need, size of your family, how much you can pay and where you want to be located.

3. If the committee does steer an offer your way, make up your mind fast because property will not be held more than 48 hours.

4. Inform the committee when and where you have found quarters so that they may get busy with the other homeless.

5. Don't wait till after Christmas to start solving your housing problem. The scramble will be even fiercer than it already is.

He Has No Problem

Congressman Victor Wickersham (D., Okla.), who entered the Washington real estate business during a brief time out of office, is another figure in current congressional scramble for houses.

"Lots of my old colleagues are coming to me with their problems and I sure feel sorry for all those men who are back in their home State still wondering where they will live here. They've been assigned their seats in the House, but that is a far cry from the kind of house they want," Wickersham said.

Congressman Wickersham came back to Congress in the recent Democratic sweep. He has no housing problem.

The housing situation reaches even into Cabinet ranks. Secretary of Labor Maurice Tobin is still living in a hotel. His aides explain he did a little house hunting last fall when he came to Washington, but he actually hasn't had time to go at it earnestly.

They Have Found Homes

A partial listing of Senators and Congressmen who have hit the housing jackpot, according to Mrs. Mushmore's records are: Senators Jarvis Hunt (D., Mont.), Robert C. Henrickson (R., N. J.), Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.), Robert S. Kerr (D., Okla.).

Congressmen A. S. J. Carnahan (D., Mo.), Edward deGraffenreid (D., Ala.), Abraham R. Ribicoff (D., Conn.), John A. McGuire (D., Conn.), Thomas S. Gordon (D., Ill.), Richard W. Hoffman (R., Ill.), Winfield K. Denton (D., Ind.), James E. Noland (D., Ind.), H. R. Gross (R., Iowa), Foster Furcolo (D., Mass.), Clare Magee (D., Mo.), Charles R. Howell (D., N. J.), Peter W. Rodino (D., N. J.

Isodore Dollinger (D., N. Y.), John McSweeney (D., Ohio), Homer Thornberry (D., Tex.), Lloyd M. Bentsen, jr. (D., Tex.), Mrs. Reva Beck Bosone (D., Utah), M. G. Burnside (D., W. Va.,) and John H. Kerr (D., N. C.).

And when Mrs. Muchmore finishes doing her bit for the incoming Congress she plans to take time out to look for a two-bedroom apartment for husband, herself, and 3-year-old daughter.

New Controls May Be Avoided

By The Associated Press

Two economists, one of them a Government policymaker, agreed yesterday that further Federal economic controls are unnecessary if military and foreign spending is held fairly close to levels now planned.

E. T. Grether, economist of the National Security Resources Board, told the Machinery and Allied Products Institute at its annual meeting, however, that present control laws should be renewed as they expired next spring.

Robert R. Nathan, private economic consultant and author of the controversial "Nathan Report" on industrial profits two years ago, foresaw a 6 billion-dollar "slicing down of profits" in 1949. This, he said, would make any sharp new controls unnecessary.

A cautionary note was sounded by A. D. H. Kaplan, economist of the Brookings Institution, Washington. If world affairs deteriorate, he said, the public should be prepared for "severe disciplines."

Kaplan forecast that the excess profits tax, twice requested by President Truman, will have a "slim" chance of being passed in the new Congress.

Instead, if a tax boost is necessary to meet Mr. Truman's demand for a balanced budget, Kaplan said, it "will therefore have to take the form of increases both in individual income taxes and in corporate income taxes."

Grether, who is helping shape the Security Board's civilian mobilization plans for any war emergency, suggested that present controls "most likely will be adequate" unless defense and foreign spending rise.

Roberts Attacks Use of Justices on Outside Jobs

New York, Dec. 11 (AP).—Owen J. Roberts, former U. S. Supreme Court Justice, said today "it would be a good thing to prevent the justices from taking outside duties."

Roberts was associated with the investigation of the attack on Pearl Harbor and with the German Mixed Claims Commission.

He told a special committee on Federal Courts of the City Bar Association that he regretted he ever had accepted the posts.

On the German commission, he said, he was accused of bias, while in the Pearl Harbor investigation a Congressional committee tried to "comb" the work.

"The President in the last war," he said, "took Federal judges and put them in all sorts of administrative jobs, the nature of which would make enemies and create hard feeling." He added:

"That put a judge's judicial position in the future in all sorts of jeopardy. If the Federal judges have the time to do that, then there are too many judges . . .

"I believe that was a desperately bad thing for the courts."

Baruch Gives Tips To Future Leaders

New York, Dec. 11 (U.P.).—Elder Statesman Bernard Baruch dropped his role of adviser to Presidents today long enough to give some advice to the young people who some day will run the country.

Baruch, avoiding all mention of politics and finance, spoke to the 750 delegates to the New York Daily Mirror's sixth annual youth forum. He said that, although at 78 he is nearly 60 years older than the average age of his audience, there really is not much difference because men and women really are just boys and girls grown up.

"A veteran may not be able to show the way to victory or success, but he can point the way to avoid defeat, disaster and frustration," he said. ". . . I am going to try to give you some of the lessons I have learned."

Here is what he advised:

Be polite, prepare yourself for whatever you are asked to do, keep yourself tidy, be cheerful, don't be envious, be honest with yourself so you will be honest with others, be helpful, interest yourself in your job, don't pity yourself, be quick to praise, be loyal to your friends, avoid prejudices, be independent, interest yourself in politics, and read the newspapers.

"I have tried to tell you what my life has told me," Baruch said. "Remember: There is no easy road to the top.

". . . Like everyone else, I lost many times but I have sometimes found a fierce joy and a certain inward satisfaction in meeting that defeat and trying again.

". . . Always be proud that you are an American. You are the bosses of the days to come. Good luck in your job."

At Savannah
Regional School Plan Topic Today

Savannah, Ga., Dec. 11 (AP).—Fourteen Southern Governors and 200 of the South's top educators will meet Sunday, hoping to bring to life the Nation's first plan for regional education.

Spokesmen from 55 Southern colleges and universities began spadework on their unique program today. They will refine the scheme in an all-day session Sunday and then toss it to the Southern Governors' Conference Monday.

Veterinary schools at Oklahoma A. and M., Auburn, the University of Georgia, and Tuskegee Institute for Negroes have been chosen tentatively to initiate the share-the-wealth educational plan.

Each State would help foot the bill for the regional schools and each State would be assigned a specific quota of students. The idea is for all States to contribute to more and better education for all Southern States.

Politics was in the background, temporarily at least. The explosive civil rights issue was not on the agenda.

Gov. Preston Lane of Maryland, chairman of the conference, said the State executives would discuss National Guard developments, Southern freight rates and submerged tidelands.

Principal speaker will be Dr. John R. Steelman, Assistant to President Truman. New officers will be elected before the Governors' Conference ends Tuesday night.

Religious Guarantees Stop at Snake Rites

Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 11 (U.P.).—The Tennessee Supreme Court ruled today that constitutional guarantees of religious freedom don't mean that persons can handle poisonous snakes during church services.

The court upheld the convictions and $50 fines each of 10 members, including three women, of the Holiness Church near Chattanooga for violating a 1947 State law against handling poisonous snakes in public.

Freight Rate Plea Studied

By The Associated Press

The Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday took under advisement the railroads' plea for an immediate new freight rate increase.

The carriers are asking for a 13 per cent advance on a long-term basis, and have requested an 8 per cent hike at once, to be collected while the larger figure is being considered.

In the closing argument, Jacob Aronson, general railroad counsel, asked for action within a week.

He said that a 10-cents-an-hour increase that the railroads have offered to their workers generally in settlement of wage demands is in the hands of a presidential emergency board, which is due to report Friday.

He argued that authority for higher rates should be in the hands of the companies before that date, explaining that the 10-cent increase already is being paid to five operating brotherhoods that settled for that figure.

Aronson told the commission that if the White House negotiations result in "something else than 10 cents, the matter may come here again."

The railroad attorney described as "rash" any suggestion of "collusion" between railroad management and its labor in the wage negotiations.

WASHINGTON'S MUSIC CORNER FOR 39 YEARS

Council Candidate Quits League Board

Parade a Feature

Boys Club Dedication Today at 3

The new $200,000 Metropolitan Police Boys' Club No. 4, 816 6th st. sw., will be dedicated at 3 p.m. today.

Chatelain

Major Robert J. Barrett, superintendent of police, will lead a parade to the new building from 6th and Washington dr., near the National Gallery, beginning at 2:45 p.m. Members of the seven Police Boys Clubs, the board of directors, and members of the Police Department will join in the march.

The Police Boys' Club Band, the club drum and bugle corps, and the Metropoltian Police Band will furnish music for the parade.

Leon Chatelain, president of the Washington Board of Trade, is general chairman of the dedication ceremonies. Chatelain, who designed the new clubhouse, announced yesterday that Attorney General Tom Clark will cut the ribbon officially opening the building.

Robert C. Simmons, president of the board of directors of the club, will be master of ceremonies.

Three members of the club, Edline Rhodes, 8, Alton Davis, 14, and Hyman Laskin, 17, will speak at the dedication. The Rev. Bernard Shaffer of St. Dominic's Church will deliver the invocation and the Rev. Harry V. Porter, pastor of Westminster Presbyterian Church, will give the benediction.

Mrs. Ralph Himstead has resigned as a member of the board of directors of the Montgomery League of Women Voters because of her candidacy for election to the county council under the newly adopted charter form of government, the league announced yesterday.

Her resignation is in accordance with the league's policy on nonpartisanship. The league requires that board members or committee chairmen closely associated in the public mind with league activities resign if they wish to undertake active work in a political campaign.

This policy does not extend to general members, who are urged, according to Mrs. J. Rene Hemingway, league president, to work as individuals in party politics.

Mrs. Philip W. Woods, 313 Ethan Allan ave., Takoma Park, Md., was appointed by the board to fill the vacancy caused by Mrs. Himstead's resignation.

Mrs. Himstead has been active in the league for the past 10 years.

Meanwhile, residents of the county are awaiting a decision of the county circuit court judges that will determine whether a special election January 6 to elect first charter county council is legal or whether the election must be postponed until 1950.

The County Commissioners, whose terms will be cut in half by a Charter election, have filed a suit that contends the election is illegal under the Maryland constitution, which requires that all State and county elections be held two years after the presidential elections.

A hearing was held Thursday before Chief Judge Charles Woodward and Associate Judges Stedman Prescott and Patrick D. Snauffer of the Sixth Maryland Circuit at Rockville Courthouse.

The judges are expected to give their decision Monday or Tuesday.

Md. Tax Men Checking Up

About 100,000 Maryland residents or workers—probably half of them Federal employes in the Washington area—will be notified that they haven't filed income-tax returns of past earnings before the State's current tax drive is over.

People who work or live in Maryland and haven't reported their earnings—some of them as far back as 1943—are receiving notices demanding either payment of taxes or proof that they don't owe any, within 15 days.

The Maryland comptroller's office, which has a branch here at 1319 F st. nw., is sending the notices to potential delinquents whose names were listed by area employers as residents or workers in the State.

As dependents are not listed in the data provided to the State, a number of those who will receive notice that they failed to file the tax returns are probably exempt from the tax, the comptroller's office said yesterday.

The Washington office was established as much to aid taxpayers as to enforce the collection of taxes, according to T. Nelson Dudley, field representative in charge.

The Maryland income tax applies not only to those living in the State, but also to those working there and living elsewhere. However, the amount of any income taxes paid to the District of Columbia, Virginia or other State may be deducted from the Maryland tax due.

Soviet Again Suspends Repatriation of Japs

Tokyo, Dec. 11 (AP).—Russia notified General MacArthur today it again would suspend the repatriation of Japanese prisoners of war during the winter.

A brief Soviet letter to MacArthur said "heavy climatic and icing conditions" made the suspension necessary.

A spokesman for MacArthur immediately expressed disappointment over the suspension "by which more than 400,000 hapless Japanese are condemned to a fourth winter" in Soviet areas.

Group to Lay Plans For Va. Hospital

Over Long Term

Va. Plans More Aid for Mentally Ill

Richmond, Va., Dec. 11 (AP).—Virginia will have an adequate physical plant for mental patients within the next "10 to 20 years" if funds for new construction continue to be made available at the present rate, State Hospital Board Chairman E. Walton Opie said tonight.

In an article written for Sunday's Times-Dispatch, he pointed out, however, that "it will take more than fine new buildings to provide the kind of care our mentally ill should have. He referred to the serious personnel shortage at State institutions.

Virginia "cannot count upon other States to produce the trained personnel its hospitals need," the hospital board chairman said, but must provide its own through establishment of a Virginia Psychiatric Institute.

More money also is imperative, Opie said, if Virfginia is to provide "proper care and treatment" for its mentally ill.

Plans for a northern Virginia mental and communicable disease hospital will be formed next Tuesday in a special meeting of area Chamber of Commerce and health officials.

The meeting, scheduled for 12:15 p. m. at the Washington Golf and Country Club, is sponsored by the public health committee of the Arlington Chamber of Commerce.

Committee Chairman Charles R. Fenwick said yesterday there are at present "no facilities" in northern Virginia for care of mental or communicable disease cases.

Gallinger and Children's Hospitals in Washington, which could take communicable cases, are overcrowded.

Fenwick, who also is a Virginia State senator, said his committee will propose one plan under which the proposed regional hospital could be built with Federal, State, and local funds as a wing to either Alexandria or Arlington hospitals.

Cost of construction could come under provisions of the Federal Hill-Burton Act, Fenwick said, with the Government paying one third of the cost. The rest would be split between the State, and a joint pool provided by Alexandria, Arlington and Fairfax County.

Present at Tuesday's meeting will be representatives of the Arlington, Alexandria and Falls Church Chambers of Commerce; Mrs. Ann Wilkins of the Fairfax Health Council, and Dr. William Wagner, chief of Tuberculosis Control of the Virginia State Department of Health.

Racial Policy Is Defended

R. Young and Commissioner Guy Mason declined yesterday to comment on the report. Both said they planned to give it a thorough reading. Commissioner J. Russell Young could not be reached for comment.

Harry S. Wender, chairman of the District Board of Recreation and a former president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, termed it "unfortunate" that the Segregation Committee's report "made the same mistake as the President's Committee (on civil rights)—the report had an end to accomplish, and those who wrote it tried to fit their arguments to support their goal."

"When the report left the impression that Negroes have no benefits at all, it was not being constructive," he said. "It should show that there have been improvements—conditions for Negroes have been improving steadily."

The committee's report charged that "in the drive to exclude the Negro, the Federated Citizens Associations have functioned as the front-line shock troops, completing his encirclement by a network of mutual defense pacts, or agreements not to sell, erected all around the inner zones of the city."

Wender, a past president of the federation, declared, "It's just not true that the federation had anything to do with the creation of the covenant system.

"It has only been the last year or two," said Wender, "that the matter of covenants has even come up at federation meetings. And to indict all citizen groups because of the covenants is silly. I do not hesitate to say that some citizen associations have their whole being based on the covenant system. But the report failed to discriminate in its references to these and other citizens groups."

Representative John E. Rankin (D., Miss.), called the report "one of the most vicious and brazen attacks ever made on the while people of the District of Columbia."

Representative Rankin said that a "large number of people" whose names were attached to the 91-page report of the National Committee on Segregation in the Nation's Capital "are known to be members of Communist-front organizations. They are simply using this method to stir race trouble throughout the country, beginning here in the Nation's Capital."

A flat denial of another section of the report of the National Committee on Segregation in the Nation's Capital came yesterday from Robert H. Lacey, president of the District of Columbia Bankers Association.

The report charged that "In Washington, the bankers themselves insist on segregation" as a condition for lending money in home financing.

"There is certainly no general agreement," said Lacey, "that a Negro family can't buy property in Georgetown, for instance, just because of race. I've been associated with the banking business for a good many years and I've never heard of such a thing."

$75,000 Fund Drive Planned For Hospital

A $75,000 drive for funds for Suburban Hospital, Bethesda, will be launched early in January, the board of directors has announced.

Funds raised during the campaign will be used to meet the cost of community services during 1949 and toward purchase of the Government-built hospital as well as needed equipment.

Anticipated cost of community service for 1949 is about $30,000. Last year 3866 contributions amounted to $33,470.

Erected by the Government at a cost of $750,000 in 1943, the hospital has been operated since then by the Hospital Association under terms of a lease from the Government. New equipment and improvements have increased the value of the hospital to about $1,000,000.

Tentative dates for the campaign are: January 3, solicitation for special gifts; January 17, business solicitation, and January 24, residential solicitation.

Members of the campaign planning committee are John A. Selby, Arthur G. Lambert, Randolph G. Bishop, Arthur B. Solon, Mrs. Alvin Aubinoe, Mrs. Morrison M. Clark, Dr. Arch L. Riddick and Francis W. Hill, jr.

Boy, 3, to Get New Skin Graft

Three-year-old Michael Rector is scheduled to receive 100 square inches more of grafted skin Wednesday to cover new parts of his critcally burned body.

The skin will be supplied by a friend whose name is unknown to the Rector family. It will be grafted, if the boy's condition is satisfactory, to his chest and abdomen, his physician, Dr. Joseph Rogers Young, said.

On Thursday, Michael's father, Everett Rector, gave 160 square inches of his skin for grafting to his plucky son. No more skin can be removed from the 35-year-old father, doctors say.

More than 20 persons have told hospital authorities they would surrender patches of their own skin in an effort to save the boy's life. This represents more skin than young Michael could possibly use, Dr. Young said, although he added that the family had asked him to express its thanks to the volunteer donors.

Michael faces a long, uphill struggle for his life. After Wednesday's skin grafting, he will receive only one more from outside donors, probably in a few weeks, the doctor said. After that, Dr. Young hopes to be able to use the boy's own skin to cover the flesh laid bare by the flames that consumed his clothing.

The boy's troubles began November 12, when he ran into his home at 613 Elliott st. ne., his clothes ablaze. With 70 per cent of his tiny body critically burned, he was given no chance for survival on his arrival at Casualty Hospital. Now, his chances are 30-70 of living, according to Dr. Young.

Halved Blood Being Used for Casualty Hospital Patients

Blood is doubling up at Casualty Hospital.

Plasma, separated from the whole blood, is being administered to one patient, and the remaining red blood cells, mixed with new plasma, are being transfused into another.

This "miracle" of blood use is explained in this manner by hospital officials:

When 29-year-old George Harley, 4411 Fall Terrace se., entered the hospital with a badly mangled arm, attending surgeons had difficulty matching his blood.

Learning that the red cells left from the whole blood from which plasma had been extracted for critically burned, little George Rector were compatible with Harvey's blood, a plea was sent to the Red Cross Blood Center.

2 Transfusions for Harley

Rushed to the hospital, the red cells were mixed with plasma, the blood reconstituted, and then administered to Harley. Two such transfusions have been given him and he is now reported responding to the treatment.

Harley was injured when his arm was caught in a machine while he was at work.

Commenting on the response by volunteer blood donors up to now, Rudolph M. Evans, blood recruitment chairman for the center, issued an appeal for more donors to provide enough for other cases such as these.

During the past week, the Red Cross Washington Regional Blood Center distributed 501 pints of blood to hospitals.

Of this amount, collected from volunteer donors in the fixed center at 1730 E st. nw., and through the bloodmobile visits to neighboring chapters, 324 pints went to patients in District hospitals as follows:

Christmas Concert Set for Tonight

The combined glee clubs of Catholic University will sing their annual Christmas concert tonight at 8:15 in the university gymnasium.

This will be the first public appearance of the choruses under the direction of the Rev. Russell Woollen, new director of choral music at the university. The program includes a Bach cantata, "A Child is Born to Us," and traditional carols and songs.

In addition to the men's and women's choruses singing separately and in combination, there will be a group of piano solos played by Amos Allen. The public is invited to the concert, for which there is no admission charge.

Dr. Tuve to Get Award for Work On Proximity Fuse

Philadelpiha, Dec. 11 (AP).—Dr. Merle A. Tuve, director of the department of terrestrial magnetism at Carnegie Institution, Washington, will be awarded the John Scott award of the City of Philadelphia on Wednesday, city officials announced today.

The award, to be made at Girard College, will be presented Dr. Tuve for his part in the development of the proximity fuse during World War II.

He has been associated with the Carnegie Institution since 1926, although from 1940 to 1946 he was on leave for war work. It was during that period he helped perfect the proximity fuse and other ordnance devices.

The Federal Diary

Thousands Seeking Jobs Disgusted With Civil Service System

(NOTE: One of the most interesting reforms before the Hoover Commission is its revolutionary plan for the recruitment and selection of Federal workers. This is the third and final article on details of the sweeping proposal.)

A casual glance at the present Civil Service system should convince any open-minded person that the exasperating delays connected with it has disgusted thousands of able people who would have preferred a career in Government.

You know the story; it happens daily. Civil Service announces an exam. People get enthusiastic and apply for it; they foresee a job right around the corner. But then starts the series of disappointments. They must wait weeks before the exam is given; once given, they must wait months before the exam papers are graded and the eligible lists are set up.

Those hardy applicants who get eligible ratings and who had the patience to wait get all steamed up again; this time, they're sure, a Government job is theirs. Frequently, what happens is more delays. It isn't uncommon for a year or two to elapse during this process.

In these days of high living costs, people simply can't wait around for a year or so for a job that may never appear. As a result, a check shows, many of the best applicants forget about Government and take jobs in private industry. Conversely, some of the people who can't get and hold jobs elsewhere are hired by Federal agencies out of desperation.

The Civil Service system was founded on the premise that it would select the best person for the job. As it's now operated, it's pointing the way to mediocrity in Government.

Civil Service doesn't like to admit it, but many of its eligible lists are obsolete the minute they are compiled. The successful applicants who are offered jobs say they are "unavailable." To put it another way, they simply got tired of waiting for the jobs to open up. It follows that much of Civil Service's examining work is a sheer waste of manpower and money.

This time-consuming system is particularly tragic today. You have this paradoxical situation: (1) Federal agencies fussing about the low-caliber people they must hire in this tight labor market, and (2) a fine group of young and hard-hitting veterans who are older in experience than their years and who would like to get into Government work.

In the veterans' group are the boys who fought the war and who are now completing their educations. They are among the best in the crop of veterans. The Government isn't getting its share of the best because its Civil Service examining program is bogged down. The program needs to be speeded up and individual attention given to the job applicants. The Hoover selection plan would fill these needs.

Also, the present examining program too frequently comes up with the wrong man for the job. The junior administrative technician exam is a good example of what happens.

That exam was announced and given a couple of years ago with a great to-do. It was hailed as a test that would round up potential administrators for Uncle Sam. Instead, it was a big flop.

Crowded at the top of the register were about 150 disabled veterans, many of whom had to have 10 preference points added to their grades to get passing marks. The agencies simply wouldn't hire them; they rejected scores of eligibles as "unqualified." It took the Air Forces a year to hire one person—that's all—from the register, and AF wanted to hire at least 25 from it.

The Hoover Commission hired aptitude experts to interview the top eligibles on the JAT register. What these people discovered was a damning indictment of the Civil Service examining system. In general terms, this was the outcome:

Only about 20 of the top veterans were qualified for the job Civil Service had rated them eligible to fill (no wonder the agencies refused to take them) but every single one of the 150 disabled veterans had "outstanding" qualifications for some type of Federal job. It's a good bet that every one of the veterans would have been hired long ago had he been certified by Civil Service for a job he was qualified for.

The twin objective of the Hoover group is to devise a system to place people in Federal jobs they are qualified for, and to speed up the examining process.

To gain these ends, it has tentatively agreed to support a plan to set up 100 offices the country-over to give job applicants aptitude tests and to tell them what jobs in Government they are qualified to fill. These offices would help the qualified people to find jobs. Applicants would be advised to look elsewhere if no suitable positions were open.

The hiring plan would give applicants fast service; they would be kept informed of their chances to land Federal jobs. Such isn't the case now. The Tennessee Valley Authority has used the broad outlines of this plan for years and it has worked well there. The Atomic Energy Commission is about ready to adopt the TVA selection plan as its own, and the Hoover group is inclined to recommend its extension throughout the Federal service.

Man Crushed Between Own Car and Truck

Groceries Scattered As Motorist Drives Through Store Wall

A man's legs were broken when crushed between his car and a truck yesterday. Another motorist drove through a grocery store wall.

Herbert W. Pelton, 69, a photographer, was in serious condition at Emergency Hospital after his accident in the rear of his studio and apartment at 1420 K st. nw. about 9:55 a. m. He was loading books into his car when crushed against its fender by the rear bumper of a truck that was backing up. Jasper E. Caviness, 23, of 1718 Seaton st. nw., the truck driver, was charged by police with backing without caution.

Groceries were scattered about in Oscar's market, 141 D st. sw., at 3:30 p. m., when the automobile of Benjamin H. Thomas, 43, of 497½ L st. sw., ploughed through a side wall. Police said Thomas lost control while driving south on 2d st. Thomas said he believed his wheels locked. He was charged with failing to give full time and attention.

Phillip E. Cox, 18, of 5814 Sherrier pl. nw., suffered brain concussion, body cuts and bruises when an automobile hit a tree after failing to make the turn at Reservoir and Foxhall rds. nw., at 2:35 a. m. Cox was taken to George town Hospital in serious condition. Police said the driver, Robert Wills, 21, of 5301 MacArthur blvd., suffered severe face cuts but went to his own physician.

Michael J. Malone, 40, of 3810 Carpenter st. se., was held for observation at Casualty Hospital with a possible shoulder fracture after his car was in a collision with that of Tobey B. Chambers, 26, of 505 A st. se., at 10:45 a. m. at 9th and B sts. se. Police estimated damage to Malone's car at $1000.

Dive Bomber Unit To Hold Practice Every Week in Va.

Dive bombing practice will be conducted by the 113th Fighter Group, D. C. Air National Guard, in the Dahlgren (Va.) area between 9 a. m. and 4:30 p. m. every Saturday and Sunday, beginning next weekend, the Potomac River Naval Command warned yesterday.

The "danger area" lies northwest of U. S. Route 301, and the aiming point for the bombing runs is in the Potomac River, just off Mathias Point Neck.

Test bombing and firing in the area by the Naval Proving Ground at Dahlgren will continue from 8 a. m. to 4:15 p. m., Mondays through Fridays.

5 From District

Auto Thefts Admitted by Md. Youth

A 19-year-old Baltimore youth confessed a part in stealing 31 green Plymouth sedans, including 5 in Washington, police said yesterday.

He abandoned each one after driving it a couple of weeks, to keep police off his trail, detectives said, but first stripped them of accessories. He added accessories he wanted to each "new" car so his friends would think he was driving the same car with additional gadgets, police said he confessed.

When arrested in an automobile stolen from a Washington woman, authorities related, he had equipped it with a police radio telephone stolen from the car of a Baltimore newspaper reporter, two extra bumper guards, two fog lights, seat covers, a backing-up light, spotlight, chromium license plate holders and oversize tires stolen from other cars. A former garage worker, he always changed the door locks and used Maryland licenses, police said.

The youth, George H. Behr, 19, was held in $8500 bail on 17 auto-theft charges by Magistrate James R. Cadden in Baltimore Friday for the grand jury, and a 16-year-old companion was held in $4500 bail on nine similar counts. Baltimore police said five other youths are held for investigation there in another car-theft ring operating in Baltimore an Anne Arundel County since October 10.

According to District Auto Squad Detective Sergts. Sigurd Ostenso and John G. Williams, Behr confessed he started stealing cars after an accident with his father's automobile. Forbidden by the insurance company to drive that again, he stole a green Plymouth sedan which he told his friends was his, police said. That was in August, he said, and he continued stealing green Plymouth sedans in Baltimore and Washington until Baltimore police caught up with him in the automobile of Mrs. Eunice V. Thomas, 1401 Sheridan st. nw., stolen November 12.

Vernon Price, a Baltimore photographer, whose car, containing two cameras, was stolen November 19, found one of the cameras in a Baltimore pawn shop. The ticket was traced to Behr, and he implicated his 16-year-old companion, police said.

Police listed the four other victims of the car thieves here as Sergt. Cline S. Gilley, Marine Barracks, 8th and I sts. se., whose car was stolen September 25; Samuel Bassin, 1901 Erie st. se., November 3; Mary J. Campalir, 3931 N. 4th st., Arlington, Va., November 11, and Albert H. Harriman, 128 Kentucky ave. se., September 11.

Charges against the pair will be presented to the District grand jury this week. If indictments are returned, a detainer will be placed against them in Baltimore, police said.

Truman Will Lead Parade But Will He Be the First?

What constitutes a formal inaugural parade?

Does a President on horseback trailed by a mounted color guard and a few well-wishers fill the bill?

That seemed to be the big issue last night in the hot and heavy row raging between Washington's top inaugural historians on the question: Will Harry S. Truman be the FIRST President to lead his own parade from the Capitol to the White House?

The controversy broke out soon after District Inaugural Committee Chairman Melvin D. Hildreth emerged from President Truman's study Thursday with the pronouncement that the President-elect will break precedent by riding in his automobile at the head of his own parade from the Capitol to the White House reviewing stand.

Library Says Otherwise

"Yes, Harry Truman will be the first to do it," Hildreth unequivocally told reporters.

But last night, 48 hours later, Hildreth was fighting for his historic life, though he still refused to admit factual inaccuracy.

The fun began when a reporter politely questioned the White House on whether Mr. Truman was really breaking precedent by leading the triumphal march.

Staff members, hesitant to rely upon memories, put the question to the Library of Congress which promptly came back with the sad story that President Truman must go down in history as the second President to lead his own inaugural parade.

Gen. William Henry Harrison, in whose compaign the rallying cry was "Tippecanoe and Tyler, too," rode on horseback to the Capitol, took his oath of office and rode back on a chilly March 4 day in 1841, Robert Gooch of the Library Reference Division reported.

Gooch insisted upon citing and quoting: "Inauguration Scenes and Incidents" by Joseph B. Bishop, appearing in the March, 1897, issue of Century Magazine.

To wit: "The day was cold and bleak with a chilly wind blowing. General Harrison stood for an hour exposed to this while he delivered his address. And at its close, mounted his horse and returned to the White House with the procession again as his escort . . ."

Twenty-three days after his inauguration, the 69-year-old President-elect was seized with a chill which developed into pneumonia. He died on April 4, 1841.

Hildreth Isn't Fazed

But quotations, even if they did come from the Library of Congress, didn't stop Chairman Hildreth.

"I'm not going by Century Magazine or any other historical works. I'm quoting Hildreth's 'Interpretative History of Inaugurations'—and I highly recommend it," he told The Washington Post with a smile.

When Harrison rode back from the Capitol it was nothing more than the President prancing down a muddy dirt road followed by a handful of job seekers and well wishers.

"That's quite a different proposition than a modern, formal parade of distinct marching units. Harry still is the FIRST President to lead his own inaugural procession."

It is definitely not Tippecanoe and Truman, too.

Delegations From 7 States Have Made Date for Inaugural

The 1949 inaugural festivities, centering around the swearing into office January 20 of the President and Vice President, yesterday began shaping up on several fronts.

Delegations from seven States, some including as many as 600 persons, already have been lined up, Melvin D. Hildreth, chairman of the inaugural committee, said yesterday.

Representatives of Kentucky, Alabama, Missouri, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Indiana, Texas and Delaware have contacted Dennis E. McQueary, head of the State groups committee, Hildreth said. The delegations will come here by special trains which will serve them as living quarters while in Washington, he reported.

The Pennsylvania Railroad's Washington office has been asked to reserve space for 126 sleeping cars, and could handle and service up to about 212, an inaugural committee spokesman said.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad has estimated it can handle 1000 sleeping cars at its yards at 4th and T sts. ne. No information is yet available, the spokesman said, on the total number of cars to be used for sleeping purposes during the inaugural period.

Meanwhile, many of the best seats along the inaugural parade line of march will be used free of charge by Government employes whose buildings face the parade route, it was learned.

Harry G. Hunter, assistant commissioner of the Public Buildings Administration, said his agency which has charge of the security of Federal buildings, would permit various Government agencies to issue special passes to their employes. The passes will be good for window seats, he said.

Leslie Biffle, chairman of the Congressional Committee, announced that the "100,000 to 150,000 persons" who will attend the oath-taking ceremonies on the east grounds of the Capitol will hear them over a $5000 loudspeaker system.

He said Capitol Architect David Lynn has awarded the job to the American Amplifier & Television Corp. for that sum.

Judges Lean To Refusal Of Recount

A three-judge panel yesterday withheld until December 22 a final decision on a requested recount of election ballots in Arlington's November 2 county board contest.

The continuance was announced in Arlington Circuit Court after the three jurists heard arguments on the legality of the recount petition, filed on behalf of Independent candidate I. Lee Potter, who was defeated for election to the board by 129 votes.

While announcng a final decision would not be made immediately, the court indicated it was "strongly inclined" to dismiss the recount petiion. It left the door open for a possible reversal of this attitude, however, by announcing that it would listen to further arguments December 22.

Judge Richard T. Wilson, spokesman for the panel, announced the date for the decision and said, "if we were called on to give our decision today, we would be inclined not to have a recount."

Judge Wilson asked attorneys for both sides to try to reach agreement on the names of three persons to serve as the election commissioners "in the event we should decide to order a recount." If the opposing attorneys cannot reach agreement on all three names, he said, each side would be asked to nominate one commissioner, and the court would appoint the third.

Lawrence Douglas, attorney for Alfred C. Frisbie, the successful candidate in the disputed election, questioned the court's authority to order a recount of ballots under existing State law. In ensuing arguments, he was opposed by Malcolm P. Miller of Arlington, attorney for 20 local residents who petitioned for the recount.

The petitioners cited a number of alleged irregularities in the final tabulation of votes. Through Miller they expressed the belief that Potter would be elected to the board if the votes were properly tabulated.

Sitting with Judge Wilson, who was appointed to the hearing from the Hustings Court of Petersburg, Va., were Judge Harold F. Snead of the Richmond Cricuit Court and Judge Walter T. McCarthy of the Arlington Circuit Court.

Correction

The Washington Post said yesterday that Dr. Cledo Brunetti, who resigned from the National Bureau of Standards, developed the proximity fuse and invented printed electrical circuits.

In fact, both the circuits and the fuse were developed by many research scientists from Government and industry including Brunetti. There was no intention of neglecting the important contributions made by these other scientists.

Biggest Crowd Of Season Jams Stores

Officials Aren't Sure of Sales Record; Many 'Just Looked'

The largest Christmas shopping crowd of the season jostled and elbowed its way through downtown stores yesterday, but some were looking and not buying, store officials said.

Although spokesmen for the large department stores were unanimous in saying the largest crowd of the year jammed their stores yesterday, they were not sure sales were correspondingly large. For the week ending December 4 the cash registers didn't play jingle bells as loudly as in the same week last year.

Even with the slight lag, sales can scarcely be called bad—as one retail official pointed out last year's Christmas buying set an all-time record so that "if we can hold within sight of the 1947 figure we're still doing pretty good."

Others expressed the belief that perhaps Washington shoppers are relapsing into "their habit of waiting until the late hours—even the last minute—to do their Christmas shopping." Last year, as in the war years, consumers were doing their Yule buying early, partly for fear of scarcities.

This year there is a good supply of nearly all goods, and in some lines, such as radios and men's clothing, supplies have been so plentiful that prices have been marked down.

To handle yesterday's crowd, the Police Traffic Division assigned an extra 25 men in the downtown area, and will keep them on duty until after Christmas. Capital Transit officials called out an additional 161 buses and streetcars.

Fringe Parking Lots Have a Record Day

The District's two fringe parking lots broke all records yesterday with 996 cars at the Municipal Center lot, 3d st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw., and 47 at the Cass-Heurich lot, 25th and E sts. nw.

The day's totals raised the week's figures to 3481 for the Center lot and 427 for the other, the highest for either location.

To Act on Phone Rates Montgomery Federation

The Montgomery County Civic Federation will act on the proposed increase of rates of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., at a meeting Monday at 8 p. m. in the Bethesda Elementary School, Wilson Lane.

A report on information regarding facilities provided by the Capital Transit Co. at street car and bus terminals will be presented by the public utilities committee.

Few Taken To Court for Business Malpractice

Restitution Made In Usury and Rent 'Frauds' Blocks Prosecution Here

An estimated 1500 cases involving various alleged malpractices by local businessmen were not prosecuted this year after the dealers made restitution to complainants and charges were withdrawn.

This situation was outlined yesterday by Assistant Corporation Counsel Charles F. King, who is in charge of the District Government's prosecutions at the Municipal Court.

These malpractices include charges of usury in loan transactions and used-car sales, misrepresentation on car sales or on renting of apartments.

Faced with the problem of how to curb further misdoing by the dealers, the District government legal staff finds it has a tough proposition.

Typical Complaints

Here is how the situation usually arises. A District resident walks into the office of Superintendent of Licenses Chatham T. Nottingham, Veterans Service Center Director Waldron Leonard or King and complains bitterly of one of the following:

1. That he was charged up to 100 per cent on the unpaid balance on purchase of a used car.

2. That he was sold a car which failed to live up to the salesman's description.

3. That he paid rent on a promised apartment but did not receive it.

Then when one of these officials checks the complaint with the alleged culprit, he is informed the matter will be studied. This usually means restitution will be made and the complainant asked to withdraw or not to press charges. The net result is that the dealer goes unfined and may continue such practices on less alert victims.

Bad Practices, West Says

Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West said this was a "bad practice and I don't like it." He pointed out, however, the difficulty of prosecuting such dealers in the face of a complainant who becomes a "reluctant witness."

"If we can ever make a case, we go ahead with it," he declared. But since many cases hinge primarily on the statement of the complainant, if he gets on the witness stand and "fails to remember" certain important facts, it becomes difficult to convict the dealer, West explained.

In some cases, the victim "is better off getting restitution since successful prosecution will be of little help to him," West said. This was particularly true for those in low-income brackets who cannot afford to go into civil suits to regain their losses, he added.

Colonel Leonard confirmed this, noting that "the wheels of justice move so slowly on these things and put the poor victim to so much trouble with hearings and postponed rehearings, that he can't afford to help his fellow man. He can't afford to lose so many days from his work."

Thom to Direct Business Unit in Red Cross Drive

Corcoran Thom, jr., vice president of Riggs National Bank and former Air Force lieutenant colonel, will head the general business unit of the area Red Cross campaign opening in March.

Thom

General Campaign Chairman H. Randolph Maddox, Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. president, said Thom's acceptance clears the way for early organization of business leaders who will present the fund-raising appeal to the 1500 larger business cohcerns here.

Hugh Morris, C. & P. staff officer, will direct Thom's headquarters unit for his fifth year, assisted by Emil A. Loehl, Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co.

Man's Leg Broken In Fall on Icy Md. Sidewalk

A 64-year-old Capitol Heights man suffered a broken leg in a fall on an icy sidewalk yesterday as Greater Washington shivered through its coldest day of the season.

The injured man, Joe Kemmerling, 6340 Central ave., was taken to Prince Georges General Hospital by the District Heights Rescue Squad.

Lowest temperature in the District was 26 degrees, recorded at 7:05 a. m. Suburban stations reported a mercury drop to 18.

Today will see considerable cloudiness, relieved by some sunshine, according to the forecaster. High temperatures will be in the 40s, it was said.

Area News in Brief

Woman, 67, Barely Misses Trip to Jail

A 67-year-old District woman missed going to jail yesterday after Municipal Court Judge Armond Scott criticized bondsmen who snub $100 clients because the bondsman's premium is only $5.

Mrs. May Ida Pyle, 67, of 928 Upshur st. nw., was before him charged with shoplifting two pairs of socks, total retail value 90 cents, from the Sears, Roebuck store, 4500 Wisconsin ave. nw. Her attorney, Walter T. Powell, demanded a jury trial and requested bond. The judge fixed bond at $100 and set trial for January 10.

Powell protested, "I won't be able to find a bondsman who will take my client out on such low bond." (Under supervision of the judges, bondsmen get $5 for each $100 bail they put up.)

Judge Scott, irate at Powell's statement, said "You see if you can locate a bondsman who will give $100 bond in this case. If you can't, let me know and I'll raise the bond. But I'll raise something else, too."

First bondsman to enter the courtroom was not interested. Marshals, meanwhile, announced the prison van was leaving at noon and was prepared to take Mrs. Pyle along. At 11:55, Bondsman Joseph Goldsmith agreed to put up her bond. The judge said he would not press action against the bonding fraternity. Mrs. Pyle went free.

Fish and Okra Destroyed

Fish and okra constituted the two largest condemnations made by District Health Department inspectors in a check of 1666 establishments last week. A total 1826 pounds of foodstuffs were ordered destroyed. Two cases resulted in fines and forfeitures of $25.

Woman Shoplifter Held

Charged with shoplifting in five department stores here, a Hagerstown, Md., woman was placed under $1000 bond yesterday pending a Municipal Court jury trial.

Mrs. Frances J. Miller, 45, pleaded innocent to five petty larceny counts. Jury trial was set by Judge Armond Scott for January 10.

The items involved totaled more than $100 in value. Included were six bottles of perfume, 10 handkerchiefs, two necktles, a pair of earrings, ice scraper, change purse, wallet, purse, cigaret case, apron and slip.

Amvets Elect Woman

Mrs. Ethel M. Richardson of 810 Green st., Alexandria, Va., has been elected 1949 post commander of Press-Communications Post No. 9 of the D. C. Department of Amvets.

Mrs. Richardson, a former WAC captain in the Air Transport Command, is employed in the secretary's office of the Federal Communications Commission. She is one of six women among 50 members of the local veterans' group that she will head.

Girard Alumni Hold Party

About 70 members of National Capital Chapter, Girard College Alumni, with their families, attended their annual Christmas party yesterday afternoon at the Elks Club, 919 H st. nw., with Jesse B. Manbeck, president, as master of ceremonies assisted by Pat Patterson.

Two Forfeit Collateral

Two contractors forfeited $25 collateral each yesterday when charged by the Corporation Counsel's office with installing heating units without a license in the Commodore Hotel, 520 North Capitol st. The forfeitures were by E. Larry Fyanes, 45, 809 I st. nw., and Harry E. Williams, 45, of 8 O st. nw.

FREAK ACCIDENT SCENE—Both legs broken after being crushed between a car and a truck (arrow), Herbert Pelton, 69, of 1420 K st. nw., lies in the alley in the rear of the K st. address. Pelton, a well-known commercial photographer, was crushed against the fender of an auto when the truck backed up, police reported. He had been loading books in the car. Pelton, tended by a policeman and Bert Force, of 1453 Harvard st. nw., had to wait 35 minutes for an ambulance after the first one sent broke down en route. (Story on Page 19)

William E. Sullivan

A native of Nashua, N. H. Sullivan served at one time as Legion State commander in New Hampshire.

After he was retired from the army as lieutenant colonel, Sullivan represented the new England State at the Legion's organizational meeting in 1919.

At the time of his death, he was assistant disbursing officer of the Treasury Department's Philadelphia office.

S. L. Wilson, Retired Navy Officer, Dead

Houston, Tex., Dec. 11 (AP).—Stanley L. Wilson, 58, retired Navy commander and former instructor in physics at Southern Methodist University, died in the Navy Hospital here last night. He resided in Dallas.

During World War I, Wilson was commanding officer of the battleship Tennessee and later was cadet commandant for the naval ROTC at Harvard.

He joined the Southern Methodist faculty three years ago and served there until he became ill five months ago.

Hospital attendants said Wilson died of a brain tumor.

Wileson's naval service spanned 36 years and two World Wars.

An honor graduate at Annapolis in 1914 he served as commanding officer of the destroyer Paulding, the Tennessee, and the famed gunboat Panay, which patrolled on the Yangtse River in China.

At the outbreak of World War II, he went to Washington as assistant hydrographer for the Navy Department.

Survivors include his wife, Mrs. Margaret Wilson, Dallas, and a son, Capt. Stanley Wilson, jr., stationed at Fort Benning, Ga.

Funeral services will be held in Dallas.

Mrs. Jennie R. Clifford

Mrs. Jennie R. Clifford, 74, of 309 Cedar st., Takoma Park, Md., passed away early Friday at George Washington University Hospital after a brief illness.

Born in Jasper, Ind., Mrs. Clifford was educated there and at Danville (Ill.) College. She had been a resident of Washington for 27 years and was a Christian Scientist. Private funeral services have been held.

Mrs. Clifford is survived by five sons and daughters. They are Park M. Clifford, 330 Peabody st. nw.; Mrs. Portia Bailey, Germantown, Md.; Patrick A. Clifford, Clifton, Va.; Hugh A. Clifford, Chicago, and Mrs. Cornelia Smith, Virginia ave. and Franklin Park, Arlington.

Truman's Views On U. S. Salaries To Be Presented

President Truman's views on the bill to raise salaries of top Federal officials will be revealed Monday at opening hearings before a Senate Civil Service Subcommittee.

Budget Director James Webb will be the first witness on the legislation which would cover 200-odd department heads and Cabinet members, though there has been agitation to seek amendments to include pay boosts for the President, Vice President and bureau chiefs.

Other witnesses scheduled to appear at the 10 a. m. hearing will be Lindsay Warren, Comptroller General, and heads of Government employe unions.

Former President Herbert Hoover, chairman of the Committee on Organization of the Executive Branch, will be the top witness, appearing at 10 a. m. Tuesday.

Brothers Elected To Council of Boys Club Branch

Two sets of brothers were elected to the nine-member boys council of the Boys Club of Washington, Georgetown Branch, yesterday.

The council, elected annually, assists in running the club and tries special cases of disorderly conduct. Council members, who will take office in January, are:

H. H. Goldstein To Be Buried In Hartford

Funeral services for Harry H. Goldstein, who for the past decade has been active in Jewish affairs in the Washington area, will be held in Hartford, Conn.

Mr. Goldstein died Thursday at the age of 61 while on a business trip in Chicago. He resided with his wife, Rose, at 2014 North 16th st., Arlington.

Born in Russia, he arrived in this country when an infant. He was educated in public schools in Hartford and came to Washington in 1939. He operated a woodworking business here for seven years, retiring because of ill health.

He was trustee and past president of the Arlington Jewish Center and was active in the construction of the center building at 2920 Lee blvd.

Other activities included office as secretary-treasurer of the Arlington Round Table National Conference of Christians and Jews, membership on the national board of directors and executive council of the United Synagogue of America. He was also secretary of the Middle Atlantic section of the National Jewish Welfare Board and was a former vice president of the Washington Friends of the Jewish Theological Seminary. He was chairman of the Arlington Friends of the Jewish Theological Seminary and was a member of the executive board of the Washington Jewish Community Council and United Jewish Appeal.

He was also a board member of the Cardozo Lodge of B'nai B'rith in Arlington, a member of the Zionist Organization of America, past chancellor of the John Hay Lodge of Knights of Pythias in Hartford and past president of the Aaron Lodge of the International Order of B'rith Sholom there.

Rabbi Ira Sud of the Arlington Jewish Center will officiate at the funeral in Hartford.

Survivors include his wife, a son, Sidney Goldstein, 5922 13th st. nw.; three daughters, Mrs. Anne Grubin of Irvington, N. J.; Mrs. Marcia Borden of Oakland, Calif., and Mrs. Rae Hoffman of New York City; two sisters, Mrs. Eva Zimmerman and Mrs. Sophie Cramer, both of West Hartford, and five grandchildren.

Mrs. Louisa G. Hesse

Funeral services for Mrs. Louisa Gordon Hesse, 79, will be held tomorrow at 2 p. m. at the Lutheran Church of the Reformation, 212 East Capitol st. Burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Mrs. Hesse was the widow of Henry a Hesse, former chief of the Division of Investigation and Review of the Civil Service Commission and secretary to Theodore Roosevelt when he served as Civil Service Commissioner. Her husband died five years ago.

Mrs. Hesse died Friday at her home, 13 Wetherill rd., Westmoreland Hills, Md., after a prolonged illness.

A native of Philadelphia, she came to Washington soon after her marriage in 1891. She and her husband were both active in the affairs of the Church of the Reformation.

She is survived by two daughters, Miss Marion E. Hesse and Mrs. Madaline H. Slye, with whom she made her home; two brothers, Robert Leitch Gordon of Columbus, Ohio, and Spencer Roberts Gordon of Detroit, Mich.; a son, John G. Hesse of Petersburg, Va., and three grandchildren.

Samuel Young Dies; Postal Executive

Samuel Robert Young, 51, executive assistant to the Postmaster General and for more than 25 years a member of the Post-office Department, died in Garfield hospital yesterday of coronary thrombosis.

Although as a lawyer Mr. Young spent much of his time dealing with the compilation and modernizing of postal law, he achieved recognition as an inspector in the fraud case of the "Jacob Baker Estate" in 1935.

Thousands of persons named Baker throughout the country had been informed by mail of a Baker estate which had vast coal, lead, zinc and iron properties, as well as 800 million dollars in cash ready for distribution among the heirs. The Bakers were invited to have their genealogy traced for a modest fee, and were pleased to learn that they were related to the tycoon.

29 Persons Were Convicted

As an inspector, Mr. Young undertook the task of proving beyond contradiction that the estate did not exist and that the tycoon was a myth. He visited all of Pennsylvania's 67 counties, digesting wills and deeds to present the Department of Justice with the required evidence. Twenty - nine persons were convicted as a result of his work.

Born in Hermanville, Miss., Mr. Young came to Washington in 1917 as an employe of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. He served in the Navy in World War I, and as secretary to Representative Percy E. Quin (D., Miss.) and Senator Pat Harrison (D., Miss.).

Held Numerous Offices

In the Postoffice Department he had served as a clerk, supervisor, assistant section chief, inspector and special assistant before assuming his duties as executive assistant three years ago. A member of the bar of the Supreme Court, Mr. Young in 1938 married Miss May Boardman. They resided at 1530 16th st. nw.

Mr. Young was a stamp collector and an ardent astronomer.

In addition to his wife, Mr. Young is survived by his mother, Mrs. M. M. Young, Jackson, Miss., and three sisters, Mrs. J. P. Martin of Jackson, Mrs. Robert Perkins, Belzoni, Miss., and Mrs. Hulon Shows, Los Angeles, Calif.

T. C. Blaisdell Dies; Retired Educator

Thomas C. Blaisdell, retired educator, whose sons are prominent in the Federal Government, died yesterday at Sanford, Fla. He was 81.

Dr. Blaisdell was born in Oil City, Pa. He studied at Allegheny College, Syracuse University, the University of Nebraska and the University of Pittsburgh.

He was president of Alma College in Michigan in 1912-15, dean of the school of liberal arts at Pennsylvania State College in 1915-20, and professor of English at the State Teachers College in Slippery Rock, Pa., in 1920-35.

He also wrote a number of English textbooks and traveled as a student of conditions in Russia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and Hawaii.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Kate Christy Blaisdell, and four children, Thomas C., jr., acting Assistant Secretary of Commerce; Donald C. of the State Department, and William M. of the Economic Cooperation Administration, and Mrs. Charles Dawson of Sanford, Fla.

Dr. Blaisdell retired to Florida 10 years ago. Private funeral services will be held in Sanford.

Wheatley's Last-Half Rally Beats Eastern in Quizdown

Upsetting the lead of Eastern Elementary School at the half, a Wheatley School sextet came through for a final victory on Quizdown Saturday.

Eastern, 17th and E. Capitol sts., led 400 to 366 points at half-time on the weekly quiz show sponsored by The Washington Post and broadcast over Station WTOP, but Wheatley, Montello ave. and Neal st. ne., picked up a 200-point advantage in the second half for a final score of 766 to 600 points.

First before the microphone was Shelia Charles, 9, 4-A grade at Eastern, of 322 17th pl. ne., who hankers for a volley ball and doll for Christmas.

Shelia didn't want to be first "because I am a little nervous," but she scored the maximum 100 points for correctly answering her first question: "How long is one term of office served by the President of the United States?" "Four years," she said.

First up for Wheatley was Martha Jane Mitchell, 9, 4-B, of 1261 Simms pl. ne., who is hoping that she will find a "doll with real hair and blue eyes" under the Christmas tree.

Answers One on Congress

"What does it mean when a light burns in the dome of the Capitol and when flags fly over both Houses of Congress?" she was asked by Quizmaster Vern Hansen. "Congress is in session," she replied promptly.

Martha Jane was one of three contestants to obtain perfect scores. The others were Edward Dacy, 10, 5-A, of 1423 Morse st. ne., from Wheatley, and Carole Anne Kurz, 11, 6-B at Eastern, of 1704 Gales st. ne.

Other members of Eastern's team were Michael McVay, 9, 5-A, of 1828 D st. ne., who treasures the Army stripes sent him by two uncles; Jay Baraff, 11, 6-B, of 1629 F st. ne., who is hoping for a television set for Christmas; Richard Appel, 10, 4-B, of 1766 E st. ne., who says everyone calls him "Applesauce," and Barbara Harvey, 10, 5-A, of 216 21st st. ne., who is hoping there is a pair of ice skates for her in Santa's sack.

Other members of Wheatley's team were Carol Wondrack, 11, 6-B, of 1222 Owen pl. ne., who says she is a "tomboy" and nicknamed "Freckles"; Harriet M. Disney, 9, 4-A, of 1220 Holbrook st. ne., who said cheerfully that "everyone says I am nut, so they call me 'Squirrel'"; Henry Marraffa, 10, 5-A, of 1720 Capital ave. ne., who prefers farms to the city because "there is more elbow room," and Janice Krug, 11, 6-B, of 5 Kendall Green ne., who would like a box of stationery and a camera for Christmas.

Both Schools Get Prizes

Wheatley, as the winning school, was awarded a 19-volume set of the World Book Encyclopedia. To Eastern went a copy of the Rand McNally International Edition Atlas. Both schools were awarded an Emerson table model radio.

Ball-point pens were presented to members of the Wheatley team and automatic pencils to Eastern team members.

Saturday's program originated in the auditorium of Wilson Teachers' College, 11th and Harvard sts. nw.

The series is under the direction of Mrs. Hazel Kenyon Markel, DTOP director of public service and education, and produced by Larry Beckerman. Programs originating in the public schools are produced in cooperation with Dr. Hobart M. Corning, superintendent, and coordinated through the radio committee of the District public schools, of which Clyde Huber is chairman.

B-29 Lands Safely After 700 Miles On Three Engines

McClellan Field, Calif., Dec. 11 (U.P.).—A B-29 Superfortress flew 700 milees on three engines with "no trouble" today but brushed close to disaster when a second engine nearly faled just before the plane landed safely here after a flight from Honolulu.

The big aircraft came down for a perfect landing at 2:40 p. m. (4:40 p. m. EDT). None of the 20 regular and ground crewmen aboard were worried until an oil leak broke out in the second engine on the same wing as the dead power plant as the plane came over the air strip. Pilot Capt. Ed Lethers, Long Beach, Calif., experienced no difficulty in setting her down.

The B-29 lost one engine 700 miles out.

Pullen Calls School Plan 'Conservative'

Baltimore, Dec. 11 (AP).—Dr. Thomas J. Pullen, jr., Maryland school superintendent, today said that a $139,800,000 five-year school building program for the State seems conservative.

That sum seems reasonable, he told the Maryland Council of Education, in view of estimates that the Maryland school enrollment will increase by 48,000 pupils in the next two years.

Dr. Pullen had given the $139,800,000 estimate at a speech Wednesday before the Western Shore County Commissioners Association meeting in Frederick.

He said Montgomery, Prince Georges, Anne Arundel, Baltimore and Harford counties faced the greatest need for new facilities. The enrollment increases have been greater in those areas, he added.

Dr. Pullen praised the incentive fund set up by the 1947 General Assembly, which gives counties State aid in building new school facilities. "This fund has proved a godsend, even though the amount of aid is not very large," he said.

"But it appears," he added, "that even increasing the incentive fund would not solve the situation in Montgomery, Prince Georges, Anne Arundel, Baltimore and possibly Harford counties.

"The bonding power of these units has almost reached its maximum and nothing short of a grant or a Government loan, State or Federal, is going to solve the problem.

"Just how far this State can go in this matter, just what kind of program is advisable, is a debatable point. However, it must be realized that unless something of this sort is done, in all probability thousands of children each year will be placed on part-time schedules in school."

Because "a year between reunions is a long time when you are old," 10 members of the class of 1886 of old Washington High School met again yesterday.

They were the guests of Class President Harry W. Dowling of 3603 14th st. nw. (who will observe his eighty-second birthday Thursday) at a luncheon at the Kenesaw Apartment, 16th and Irving sts. nw.

They had met last this past spring when they held their annual reunion and Thomas C. Barr, 81, of 4314 14th pl. ne., was elected class president.

Yesterday, although their ranks were thinned, their spirits were high as they exchanged memories and banter about the table with its Christmas decorations.

Originally there had been more than 200 members of the class. Washington, on O between 6th and 7th sts. nw., was the only white high school in the city. They were proud then, and still are, that President Cleveland presented the diplomas in the ceremony at Albaugh's Opera House, which then stood at 15th st. and Pennsylvania ave.

Just how it happened that the President presented the diplomas no one knew yesterday, but they were firm in the belief that they are the only high schoool class to receive their diplomas from the hand of the President of the United States. Another highlight of that graduation was John Philip Sousa leading the United States Marine Band.

Today there are about 15 active members in the city, according to Dowling, "the oldest auctioneer in the city." How many more there may be here and elsewhere in the country he does not know.

Three members of the class were unable to attend yesterday. They are Charles H. Davis, Charles Bates and Mrs. Sally Harper. Illness kept them away.

Among those present at the luncheon was Allan Davis, 82, of 900 11th st. se., whose daughter, Miss Evelyn Davis, sent corsages and boutonnieres to the class.

Looking back over the years, he said, "we have lived through two world wars and two scientific revolutions: the acceptance of the theory of evolution and the turning of energy into matter and matter into energy. There has never been such a change in the world.

"We won't see the future, but they won't see what we have seen."

Student, Intern At GWU Win Top Anatomy Honors

A George Washington University medical student and an intern at the university hospital won top honors in national anatomy examinations, it was announced yesterday.

The exams are given annually by the National Board of Medical Examiners.

First place in part 1—comprising nonclinical subjects—went to Francis N. Waldrop, 22, of 1111 Noyes dr., Silver Spring. He is a third-year medical student and was in competition with 1963 others in the test.

First place in part 2—comprising clinical subjects—went to Dr. Katherine N. Herrold, an intern who competed with 264 candidates.

Ex-Gov. Arnall Heads Movie Independents

Hollywood, Dec. 11 (AP).—The president of the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers will be Ellis Gibbs Arnall, former Governor of Georgia, a spokesman for the organization said today. Arnall will be elected Sunday, but he already has unofficially taken the job. He succeeded Donald M. Nelson former head of the War Production Board.

D. C. Births, Deaths Show 1948 Drop

Births, deaths and infant mortality in the District for the first 48 weeks of 1948 decreased under the same period of 1947, but the death rate increased slightly, the Health Department reported yesterday.

An increase in Negro births was more than offset by the decrease in white births, Health Officer George C. Ruhland reported for the period ending December 4. Total births of 25,970 for 48 weeks this year was 993 under the same period last year; total deaths were 7834, a drop of 124.

The death rate per 1000 population was 10 this year, 9.5 last. Deaths under one year dropped from 825 to 598. White infant mortality rate was 20, Negro 29.1, a decrease from last year's 25.5 for whites, 43.2 for Negroes.

Chicken pox, pneumonia and scarlet fever led a list of 47 communicable diseases reported by physicians. Measles, with 3032 cases, led in the total of 5440 cases for the first 48 weeks this year, causing 646 deaths. Pneumonia was second, with 731 cases.

Cyclone Batters Lisbon

Lisbon, Portugal, Dec. 11 (U.P.)—A cyclone, with winds ranging up to 80 miles an hour, struck Lisbon today.

Victim Is 12

Paring-Knife Killer Slays Girl in Home

Pittsburgh, Dec. 11 (U.P.)—A killer, believed to be a sex fiend, who stabbed a 12-year-old schoolgirl 36 times with a pairing knife while her parents were out bowling, was the object of a police manhunt tonight.

Carol

Carol Lee Kensinger, pretty, blonde junior high school student, stayed home last night to bake a cake rather than accompany her parents to a neighborhood bowling alley.

Sometime during the evening, she was overpowered and ruthlessly stabbed about the head and body and arms with a 4-inch paring knife and left for dead in the kitchen.

She managed to drag herself to the telephone in the dining room, but before she could call for help she collapsed and died.

Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Kensinger, came home shortly before midnight and found her still clutching the receiver. The paring knife, wiped almost clean of blood, was on the kitchen sink.

Police ruled out robbery as the motive when the Kensingers reported nothing had been taken.

A preliminary investigation failed to show the girl had been raped.

Carol was fully clothed except for her shoes and stockings.

Police said the fact that a shade on the kitchen door was half-way up and the door unlocked led them to believe that the killer knocked on the door and was admitted by the girl because she knew him.

Yam Blows Up As Housewife Peeks in Oven

Chicago, Dec. 11 (U.P.)—Strange accidents in which a potato exploded in a housewfe's face and a cooigarette shot a man were described today by a safe expert who slipped on the ice and broke his arm while en route to work.

The accidents were listed in the National Safety Council's report on the year's odd happenings.

The report was prepared by Paul John director of public information for the council who listed himself among the accident victims. Jones completed a paper last winter on how to be careful, slipped on the ice on his driveway as he headed for the office, and broke his arm.

"I even sprinkle salt on the ice cubes now," Jones said.

Mrs. Alfred Swauger, Ravenna, Ohio, was the victim of the yam-that-went-wham accident. She baked a sweet potato in the oven. Steam built up within the skin. When she opened the oven door, the potato exploded in her face. She wasn't hurt, but suffered from shock.

The victim of the cigarette shooting was James Drager, Beloit, Wis. He placed a lighted cigarette on an ashtray and settled back to read his newspaper. The cigarette set off a bullet that had been left in the ash tray and Drager was shot in the arm.

"No other cigarette can make that statement," the council's report said.

Then there was the case of the bathtub that slipped and fell on a man. Andrew Anderson, Oakland, Calif., was driving past a truck on a highway near Gilroy, Calif., when the truck hit a chuckhole. Three bathtubs slipped off the truck and crashed through Anderson's car. One hit Anderson and he was treated for bruises.

Ed Taylor, Matewan, W. Va., was a victim of a head-hunting steam shovel.

When Taylor parked his car in Matewan, the boom of a nearby clamshell power shovel swung around and knocked down a utility pole. As he stuck his head out to see what was going on, the clamshell slipped down, snapped its jaws and locked up Taylor's head and shoulders in the bucket. When rescuers got him out they found that he was scratched and shocked, but not injured seriously.

Pope to Celebrate Christmas Eve Mass

Vatican City, Dec. 11 (A.P.)—The Vatican today announced Pope Pius XII will celebrate midnight mass Christmas Eve in his private chapel in the Apostolic Palace. The mass is to be broadcast over Vatican short- and medum-wave stations.

Sunday School Gains Reported By Methodists

More people in the Washington area of the Methodist Church are going to Sunday school than ever before, according to the Department of General Church School Work of the Methodist General Board of Education.

In a report on church school progress during the past quadrennium, the board said average Sunday school attendance for the area was 131,339 every Sunday. This is a gain of 3338 every Sunday over the 1947 total, and an increase of 12 per cent for the past four years, the report stated.

The Washington area includes the Baltimore, central Pennsylvania, Peninsula and Puerto Rico Provisional annual conferences of the denomination. Bishop Charles W. Flint, resident bishop of the Washington area, said that the Baltimore annual conference, in which the District area is inculded, was among the leaders in church school gains among the East Coast conferences.

Judges Disagree on Proof Burden in Gun Carrying Case

Judge John P. McMahon of Municipal Court yesterday interpreted the District's gun-carrying law directly counter to a decision of Chief Judge Bolitha J. Laws of District Court.

In sentencing Andrew Lee Brown, 27, 1512 5th st. nw., to pay a $100 fine for carrying a deadly weapon, Judge McMahon said:

"I feel this is a very important matter and there should be a final decision on the question in the courts."

He was referring to a decision of Judge Laws holding the Government must charge and prove that the defendant lacked a license. Judge McMahon ruled that it is up to the defendant to prove he has a license to carry a gun and if he fails, he can be found guilty.

Appeal bond was set at $100 for Brown. His attorney, Charles Garlock, announced he was petitioning the Municipal Court of Appeals for review.

Judge Laws' decision was challenged by the Government in earlier stages. However, when it reached the Supreme Court, the Justice Department decided to allow dismissal of the case without argument.

The contrary decisions of the two judges makes the question of proving the license an unsettled one in Washington.

Youth to Die in Chair

Worcester, Mass., Dec. 11 (U.P.) Frederick S. Pike, 19, was convicted tonight of murder in the gun-and-hatchet slaying of Paul Sayka, 17, an Episcopal bishop's choreboy, and immediately was sentenced to death in the electric chair.

Benning Rd. Traffic Fights New Winter

By James B. Graham
Post Reporter

It will be another winter of fighting traffic along the slippery surface of narrow, congested Benning rd. ne. for residents of the eastern tip of the District, but long-sought improvements are promised for next summer.

Renewed agitation for relief from the hazards of what is termed the "worst stretch in the District" by a police traffic official has cropped up in recent weeks in meetings of area citizen groups.

Meanwhile the District Public Utilities Commission scheduled a hearing for Monday to reconsider the effective date for replacing streetcar service on the Rosslyn-Benning line with buses. This line uses Benning rd. from 15th and H sts. ne. to the viaduct at Minnesota and Kenilworth aves. ne.

Substitution of the buses was postponed last April "until the outlook for the supply of petroleum products should become clearer."

The Federation of Civic Associations recently directed a plea to the Commissioners for specific relief from the ever-present dangers and tedious delays facing motorist using the artery during rush-hour periods.

The civic association asked for widening of Benning rd. between Oklahoma and Minnesota aves., including the Anacostia River Bridge and the railroad viaduct; construction of a bridge over the Anacostia on either East Capitol st. or M st. extended to provide an alternate route, and construction of an underpass at 15th and H sts. ne.

Turn Arrow Wanted

Particular interest of the Citizens Association of River Terrace is in obtaining a right turn arrow to function simultaneously with the red light at 34th st. and Benning rd.

Members of that body told of daily halts of many minutes' duration before they could make the turn into River Terrace on their homeward trips. Allowing traffic to make the right turn on both red and green lights would speed up traffic approaching the intersection, it was contended.

Ernest F. Harper, president of the Federation of Civic Associations and member of its Kingman Park unit, said his local group wanted an additional traffic light at 21st st. to aid in pedestrian crossing.

Construction of an additional bridge across the Anacostia on East Capitol st. is of vital importance, Harper declared. "One bridge simply is not enough to handle the enormous flow of rush-hour traffic," he maintained.

A second bridge is also desired by the Eastland Gardens Civic Association, another affected group.

Pontoon Bridge Advocated

Emergency construction of a pontoon bridge across the Anacostia to relieve congestion on the Benning, Sousa and 11th st. bridges was advocated by a joint meeting of the Kenilworth Citizens Association and the Beaver Heights, Md., citizens group. The meeting also urged continuation of streetcars until facilities at Benning Bridge are imporved.

Charles M. Maize, president of the Kenilworth group, blames buses for much of the congestion. "They just don't pull far enough out of traffic when they make their stops," he complained. "They block off the single lane and keep traffic at a standstill out to the bridge."

Because of this, Maize does not believe that elimination of streetcars along the route will be any improvement. "More buses would just add to the confusion," he contended, "and the streetcars are in the center of the street, out of the way."

Further discussion of the problem will be taken up at meetings of two affected civic groups this week, the Northeast Boundary Civic Association Monday and the Central Northeast Civic Association Wednesday. The latter group will call for construction of the East Capitol st. bridge and continuation of streetcar service specifically.

Lieut. William J. Liverman, head of the Traffic Department's Accident Investigation Unit, advanced another reason for the slowing of traffic between 17th st. and the bridge, which he called "undoubtedly the most dangerous 12 blocks in the city."

Parking Cuts Flow

Benning rd. normally can accommodate two lanes of traffic moving both ways, Lieutenant Liverman explained, but the commercial parking along that stretch reduces the flow to a single lane.

Supporting his labeling of the roadway as the District's "worst," the AIU head said the unit had handled 302 accidents this year on Benning rd. between the 15th and H sts. intersection and East Capitol st. Six have resulted in fatalities, he said.

Additional ammunition for the appellation of "worst" as applied to Benning rd. is supplied by Director of Vehicles and Traffic George E. Keneipp. Traffic on the artery has increased 50 per cent over the previous peak in 1941, while the over-all increase for the District is but 13 per cent, he said.

District heads promise relief next year, although the East Capitol Bridge is definitely "out of the picture."

This proposed structure was abandoned when erection of the National Guard Armory on East Capitol st. was approved, Jack N. Robertson, Director of Highways, said.

Anacostia Span Considered

However, District heads are now considering an Anacostia River Bridge on Massachusetts ave. ne. to provide the sorely needed alternate route, he said, although it is definitely a "long-range" program.

Should this project be instituted, Massachusetts ave. would be extended through the grounds of Gallinger Hospital, Robertson said.

Positive plans for the summer include tearing up the streetcar tracks, narrowing the center strip and making certain repairs to the existing road surface, he said.

Funds for this work are now in the District's possession, Robertson said, and the work "definitely" will be started in the spring, contingent on removal of the tracks by Capital Transit Co. and installation of needed underground lines by Potomac Electric Power Co. and Washington Gas Light Co.

Capital Transit Co. is ready to proceed with the track removal when given the go-ahead signal by the Public Utilities Commission, Vice President E. Cleveland Giddnings said.

Traffic Lights Planned

With the removal of the streetcar tracks, the ultimate width of Benning rd. will have been reached, for the present at any rate.

John H. Mitton, traffic engineer for the Department of Vehicles and Traffic, said installation of two-traffic lights is on his department's schedule. The one at 21st st., so strongly advocated by Civic Federation President Harper, is set for "this year," Mitton said.

He also "hopes to install next summer" another at the Oklahoma ave. intersection.

Mitton said no study had been made of the need of a right-turn arrow with the red light at 34th st. His department had received no requests for such a device, he said, but on receipt of a request would make a study of the situation.

GWU Debaters Win Sectional Invitation Event

George Washington University won the Old Dominion Invitational Debate Tournament held Friday and yesterday at the University of Richmond. Eight other teams participated.

Henry C. Krebs of Sheboygan, Wis., and Charles E. Lilien of Barrington, Ill., presented George Washington's negative arguments on the topic, "Federal Aid to Education," in the round-robin affair which saw each team debate with all others. Krebs was selected as outstanding individual debater.

Other teams entered were Georgetown University, University of Florida, United States Naval Academy, Wake Forest College, University of Virginia, Pennsylvania State College, Randolph Macon College and University of Richmond.

Rent Control Is Topic On Radio Roundtable

Rent control legislation will be discussed on the District Roundtable Forum over Station WINX at 7:30 p. m. today. Participants will be William V. Barr, special assistant to the housing expediter; Robert E. Cogswell, administrator of District Rent Control; Ernest Henry, executive director of the Home Builders' Association, and Rufus Lusk, president of the Washington Taxpayers' Association.

Ben Paul Noble, Washington attorney, will be moderator.

Long Service

2 Federal Employes To Retire

Otis B. Johnson, secretary of the Federal Trade Commission, will retire December 31 after nearly 44 years of Government service, it was announced yesterday.

Another retiring Government employe is Benjamin F. Sollers, 70-year-old bookbinder with the Government Printing Office, who was guest of honor at a testimonial dinner at the Lotus Club Friday night marking the end of his 45 years with the GPO.

Johnson, who lives with his wife at 3930 Connecticut ave. nw., entered the Federal service in 1905 at the age of 16 as a messenger at the Navy Yard. In 1909, he became a stenographer for the Bureau of Corporations, which was transferred from the Department of Commerce to the FTC in 1915.

A native of Montgomery County, Md., Johnson has lived in the Washington area all his life. He attended the Washington public schools and the Washington College of Law. After receiving a law degree there, he was admitted to the District bar in 1922.

His only son died in 1941. His daughter-in-law and grandson, Otis B. Johnson 2d, live in Bloomington, Ill.

A native of Baltimore, Sollers learned the bookbinding trade there before joining the GPO in 1903. After commuting from Baltimore daily for 18 years, he moved here in 1921.

Sollers lives with his son, Charles G. Sollers, at 438 Buchanan st. nw. He has a grandson, Charles G. Sollers, jr., and a great granddaughter, Terry Lee, 21 months.

More than 100 members of Local 4, International Brotherhood of Bookbinders (AFL), of which Sollers has been a member for 54 years, attended his testimonial dinner. Seaborn D. Jones, former president, was the speaker.

Wife Awarded Spaniel That Can't Say 'Papa'

Los Angeles, Dec. 11 (AP).—Kelley, cocker spaniel whose mistress says it can say "Mama" but but not "Papa," will stay with mama pending her divorce suit against papa.

Mrs. Gladys Bales, 43, said yesterday in Superior Court that her estranged husband, Le Roy, had taken Kelley from her.

"I can't get along without him (the dog.) He can say 'Mama' plain as can be, and 'I love Mama.' He can't say 'Papa'."

That was good enough for Judge Elmer D. Doyle. He awarded the dog to Mrs. Bales. Kelley was speechless.

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Sales Boom Losing Its Bloom

Don't write off Christmas business as a flop—yet.

True, November retail sales were below a year ago. Sears, Roebuck and Montgomery Ward figures have just confirmed the results of large department stores.

Livingston

True also, department store sales during the first week in December—for the week ended December 4—were off 4 per cent compared with the corresponding week of 1947, making the fifth successive week in which sales failed to come up to the level of the previous year. Only once before in the postwar period have sales run below a year ago for a month (see chart).

The poor showing in the week ended December 4 was due partly to a fluke. It included two days of November—29 and 30. And customarily, sales drop at the end of a month because charge account customers withhold purchases till the new month begins. That gives them a month more in which to pay. The corresponding week of last year—the week ended December 6—did not have any tail-end November days in it.

Once the new month began, department stores noted an immediate pickup in volume. And the pickup continued into the next week: So much so that a gain instead of a loss is probable when returns for the week ended December 11 come in.

Sales Slump Explained

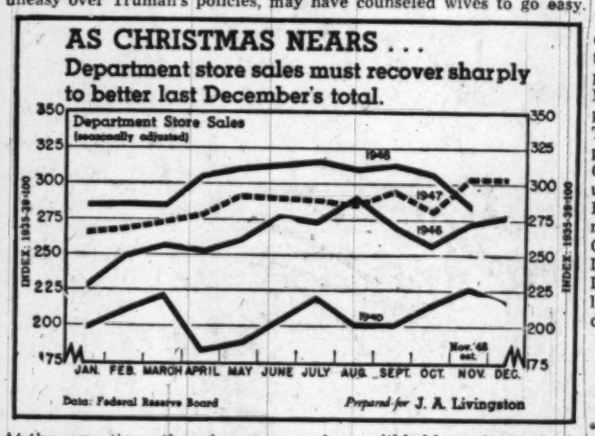
Five factors account for the five-week slump in department store sales:

1. The weather. Unseasonably warm days in November failed to bring out shoppers for overcoats and suits and resulted in a drop in sales of other items too. If people don't go to the stores, they don't buy.

2. Price drops. The reentry of price competition has put an end to automatic increases. Heretofore, if a store sold just as much merchandise as formerly, its cash registers gave out with a louder ring—simply because prices had risen. Now stores must sell more to ring up more. This is particularly true of clothing. Also, some shifts into lower-priced items have occurred.

3. Regulation W. On November 1, 1947, Regulation W, controlling installment credit terms, lapsed. That resulted in a spurt in sales for the month. This year, Regulation W was restored in late September. That pushed some buying into early September—people wanted to beat the regulation—and consequently subtracted sales from October and November.

4. President Truman's election and the drop in stock prices. A market drop always affects retail sales in New York, Boston, Philadelphia and other investment cities. Upper-bracket Republicans, uneasy over Truman's policies, may have counseled wives to go easy.



At the same time other shoppers may have withheld purchases thinking that prices might be rolled back. Markdowns and special sales since have not proved them wrong.

5. Reversion to prewar Christmas buying patterns. During 1945, 1946 and 1947, people did their Christmas shopping early—to buy while the buying was good. Store inventories were still low and many items, especially electric appliances, were scarce. So Christmas shoppers were on the prowl in mid-October and throughout November. Now, however, with department stores able to make immediate deliveries on radios, electric appliances, furniture, and all manner of soft goods, housewives can afford to put off their Christmas buying until after Thanksgiving, as formerly.

Boom Losing Bloom

Each postwar year the boom loses more bloom, as the following table shows:

Year	% Gain in Dept. Store Sales
1946	28%
1947	8
1948*	5

*To December 4.

And the gain in 1949 over '48 is likely to continue the narrowing trend—not only because prices have shown downward tendencies, but because shoppers are warier. Some are priced out of the market. Others want to build up savings. According to the Department of Commerce, personal savings today are running at 7.8 per cent of disposable income as against 5.4 per cent in the last half of 1947.

That's why the next two weeks of shopping are so significant. If the last five weeks mark a permanent change in the buying habits, goods will back up on retailers, then on wholesalers, then on manufacturers. And industrial expansion plans will be curtailed pronto, and we'll have a recession. However, remember this. We've had sector-by-sector recessions in various lines—furs, cosmetics, books, jewelry, etc. This may be another such readjustment, concentrated in clothing and shoes. And one of the greatest safeguards against a major slump in 1949 is that it has been so well advertised. So many people have expected and prepared for it.

New York Cotton

New York, Dec. 11 (AP).—Cotton futures were easy today, closing 1.05 to 1.40 a bale lower. Trading was active and the market lacked support from the opening bell.

Hedging and liquidation of nearby December contracts and commission house selling were encountered throughout. There was a lack of any evidence of export buying which was a sustaining influence during the week. Buying for domestic mill accounts also was absent. Traders attributed part of the selling to news the Department of Agriculture will dispose of some commodities at less than 90 per cent of parity in 1949.

The range follows:

Grains Sag as U. S. Alters Sales Policy

Chicago, Dec. 11 (AP).—A new domestic sales policy announced by the Commodity Credit Corp. caused heavy selling in soybeans, lard and grain on the Board of Trade today.

Soybeans plunged the 10-cent daily limit and all lard contract except December reached new seasonal lows.

The market opened easy, although losses at the start were mostly confined to fractions. However, soybeans were weak right from the start.

As the session progressed, selling orders increased and buyers shied away from the market. Final prices were the day's lows.

Wheat closed 2¾-3½ lower, corn was 1½-1⅛ lower, oats were ⅝ to 1 cent lower, rye was 2½ to 4 cents lower, soybeans were 10 cents lower and lard was 37 to 65 cents a hundred pounds lower.

The new CCC sales policy, to become effective January 1, will permit the Government agency to sell its products domestically at 90 per cent of parity, at a price half way between the support level and full parity, or at a price which will reimburse the CCC for the cost of the products.

This differs from the present policy, which prohibits sales at less than parity. It was interpreted as a highly depressing influence on futures selling above parity. Because soybeans are selling most above parity, they bore the brunt of the selling.

In contrast, all corn futures are not only selling below parity, but also below the Government support level. However, several grain men felt the new regulation dimmed the prospects for corn futures advancing above the Government loan, which is $1.55 a bushel at Chicago.

The sell-off carried May wheat below the Government loan level of $2.28 for cash wheat here. The bread cereal also had to contend with an optimistic Agriculture Department report concerning the 1949 winter wheat crop. Conditions were called more favorable than a year ago.

The range follows:

Kindler Leads D. C. Orchestra 8 More Times

After today's concert in Constitution Hall, the National Symphony Orchestra will perform only seven more times under the baton of Dr. Hans Kindler.

Dr. Kindler, whose resignation as director of the orchestra becomes effective next April, will conduct the orchestra on December 15 and 19, January 5 and 26, February 23 and 27 and March 16.

All these concerts will be with the full orchestra except the one of January 26. This will be a special recital by Myra Hess, the English pianist. She will be assisted by a small group of musicians from the National Symphony under Dr. Kindler's direction.

Howard Mitchell, who succeeds Dr. Kindler next April, will conduct the orchestra February 2, 13 and 20 and will share the podium with Louis A. Potter, conductor of the Washington Choral Society, on January 16.

Guest conductors will be Georges Enesco, the Romanian composer, on January 19 and 23; Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, on February 16, and Walter Hendl, assistant conductor of the New York Philharmonic, on April 3.

It was also announced that Dr. Kindler has accepted an invitation from the Philadelphia Orchestra to conduct that orchestra on January 7 and 8.

Reynolds Metals Plans Expansion

Richmond, Va., Dec. 11 (AP).—The Reynolds Metals Co. is planning a five-million-dollar expansion of its aluminum sheet rolling plants in Chicago and Muscle Shoals, Ala.

A spokesman for the company announced the planned expansion here last night. The spokesman said this was being done in an effort to make the plants "the fastest in the world."

Theirs Is a Pre-Christmas Sadness . . .

The Washington Post

BEREFT FAMILY—Mrs. Earl Garrison, whose husband died yesterday in Gallinger Hospital after telling her he had swallowed five spoonfuls of sodium fluoride, poses with her sons, Wesley, 7 (left), and Earl, 10, in their home, 1509 C st. se. Mrs. Garrison said her husband had been despondent over his inability to provide his family Christmas presents. Garrison also leaves a daughter, Nancy, 4. Wesley is holding a photograph of himself in leg braces talking to General Eisenhower. It was made last spring during the Easter Seal drive

Father of 3 Found Dead Of Poisoning

The unemployed father of three children died in Gallinger Hospital Thursday night, after telling his wife he had swallowed poison.

The man, of 1509 C st. se., Earl Garrison, 33, was the father of a crippled son who posed with General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower last year for Easter Seal publicity pictures.

District Coroner Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald issued a temporary certificate of death last night pending a chemical analysis of the stomach contents.

The dead man's wife said he had suffered from ulcers and a heart condition and had been despondent over his inability to provide for his family.

Garrison, playing with two of the children, left to get a glass of water, his wife said yesterday. A few minutes later he shouted, "Honey, I dood it," Mrs. Garrison said. When she asked him what he had done, he said only, "You'll find out," according to his wife.

Mrs. Garrison said she rushed into the kitchen, saw the can of rat poison opened next to an empty glass, and rushed to her husband's bedside. She said he told her he had taken five spoonfuls.

There are three Garrison children, Earl, jr., 10; Nancy, 4, and 7-year-old Charles Wesley Garrison, whose most cherished possession is a photograph of himself in leg braces talking to General Eisenhower.

'Saint' Harry, Dewey Panned At Dinner

tion of the fact, that nearly all of its political experts had predicted Dewey the winner, presented an opening skit in which members sang a ditty on the darkened stage.

Wore Toppers, Tails and Shorts

When the lights went up, they were revealed in toppers, tails, white ties—and shorts of brilliant hue.

The dinner was opened with the "speech in the dark" by Phelps H. Adams, Washington correspondent of the New York Sun and retiring Gridiron Club president.

At the club's annual meeting yesterday, Richard L. Wilson, Washington correspondent of the Des Moines Register and Tribune, was elected president for 1949. Thomas L. Stokes of United Features Syndicate was elected vice president. Reelected treasurer, secretary and historian, respectively, were Walker S. Buel of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, Paul Leach of the Knight newspapers, and Lewis Wood of the New York Times.

In setting the keynote for the dinner, Adams said:

"We welcome you tonight in the immortal spirit of Christmas—the spirit of sleigh bells . . . and reindeer . . . and good old Saint Harry.

"Throughout our land tonight little children are writing their annual Christmas letter to Santa Claus at the North Pole. Democrats, of course, just write direct to Washington."

In a more solemn vein, he acclaimed the dinner as a demonstration of "America's most prized possession — good sportsmanship," noting that the three principal figures in the recent election—Mr. Truman and Governors Dewey and Thurmond—were joining in an evening of "good fellowship and good humor."

Dewey was presented with a scroll which extended him a lifetime invitation to future dinners, an invitation in the past extended to every former President. The scroll read:

"Inasmuch as virtually the entire membership of the Gridiron Club of Washington, D. C. elected you to the Presidency in the early days of 1944; and

"Inasmuch as you conducted a campaign of high purpose upon a high plan which strengthened us in our predictions, and

"Inasmuch as by attending the Gridiron dinner of December 11, 1948, as an honored guest and speaker you have given evidence of that high sense of American sportsmanship which your career has exemplified; now, therefore,

"The Gridiron Club is pleased to extend to you this respectful greeting, which it has always reserved for former Presidents of the United States and with our greeting, a most cordial invitation to join us at all our future dinners as long as we both shall live."

Find Pumpkin in Red Sea

One of the skits at the dinner depicted Attorney General Tom C. Clark fishing in the Red Sea with Representative Karl E. Mundt (R., S. Dak.) and Representative Richard M. Nixon (R., Calif.), both members of the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Their first bite produced only a minnow; their second catch was a pumpkin, in which the anglers found a document conferring "The Royal and Imperial Order of the Pumpkin Head" on Clark, a reference to the dispute over the Hiss-Chambers case and the mysterious hidden secret documents.

There was another skit which parodied foreign affairs and American troubles with the Russians in Berlin and in the field of overseas propaganda.

The skit was staged in a Russian radio station in Berlin, identified as NKVD—"on the air, in the air and in your hair 25 hours a day."

Dewey Jibed for Lunatic Remark

The Republican skit satirized the pollsters and jibed at Dewey for his moment of anger when he branded the engineer of his special campaign train "a lunatic" when the engineer backed the train into a crowd in southern Illinois.

The Dixiecrats came into the picture when a policeman announced that a woman named "Miss Dixiecrat" was outside with a baby in her arms. "She is more to be pitied than censured," was the theme for this one.

Another skit introduced the Democratic political bosses who didn't think Mr. Truman could win the election. They were led by Jake Arvey of Chicago, who sang "Open the door, Harry."

Music at the dinner was provided by a Marine Band orchestra under the direction of Maj. William F. Santelmann, leader of the Marine Band and musical director of the Gridiron Club.

Guests at the dinner included Chief Justice of the United States Fred M. Vinson and seven members of the Supreme Court and Senator Alben W. Barkley, the Vice President-elect.

Brazil, Norway and Egypt were represented by their Ambassadors and all the members of the Cabinet were there except Secretary of State Marshall and Secretary of Defense Forrestal.

Georgetown Gym May Be Started By Next Fall Term

New York, Dec. 11 (AP).—Construction of Georgetown University's McDonough memorial gym will begin before the fall term if the alumni "completes its pledge to raise $800,000 by February 7, 1949," it was announced today.

Georgetown's president, the Rev. Lawrence C. Gorman, S. J., made the announcement at the quarterly meeting in New York of the national board of governors of the University Alumni Association.

At the association's opening session yesterday, National Chairman Charles Milton of Jersey City, N. J., announced that $490,000 already had been raised for the project.

Election Adds Spice to Satire at Gridiron Dinner

Newscast Tells Of Stalin Love For 'Old Harry'

President Harry S. Truman and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York last night came under the heat of the Gridiron which "sears but leaves no scars" in its jesting. Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, candidate of the "Dixiecrats," also was a target of the club's satire.

The entertainment for 500 distinguished guests was pitched to the November election, but also parodied Congress, unification of the armed forces and the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Members of the newspaper club did not spare themselves in the grilling. They took cognizance of their own errors in election predictions by appearing in the opening chorus in white tie, top hats, tails and—loud shorts.

The skits were directed by Marshall McNeil of the Houston Press, chairman of the music committee, and William H. Mylander of the Minneapolis Star and Tribune, chairman of the entertainment committee.

In the opening scene the entire Gridiron Club sang the concluding song of the organization's spring dinner, which carried an implied prediction of President Truman's defeat in the election. The song, sung to the tune "Now Is the Hour," was rendered on a dark stage as follows:

Now is the hour
When we must say goodby.
Off for campaigning
Travel far and nigh.
While we're away
November will draw near.
When we return we wonder
Who'll be here.

The lights were flashed on to reveal the club members clad in toppers, tails, white ties—but without their trousers in recognition of their faulty election prediction. To the same tune the chorus then sang:

Now is the hour
When we must break the news—
We who predicted
Dewey could not lose.
We saw the crowds,
Heard Harry's every word;
Then voters everywhere gave us
The bird!

The chorus concluded the opener with:

Now is the hour
To plan the next campaign.
Four years from now we'll
Do it all again.
In Fifty-two—
Our readers please take note—
We'll tell it all before they Count the vote.

On the Air, in Your Hair

Switching to foreign affairs, a musical skit was staged in a Russian radio station in Berlin, which the announcer hailed as "NKVD is on the air, in the air and in your hair, 25 hours a day." The theme song was given by a quartet to the tune, "You Call Everybody Darling," as follows:

We call everybody darling,
We'd really love to call you darling, too.
So what's the use of saying
Democracy is paying
When you don't know one thing about democracy that's true.
We know the U. S. A. is stalling,
Their dollars are depreciated so
That when you go to spend
The money that they lend
You'll want to string along with Uncle Joe.

A Red soldier was dragged to the microphone at the point of a gun to sing to the air, "Underneath the Arches":

Always on the marches
From Moscow to Berlin.
Oh, my aching arches
To Moscow once ag'in.
Ev'ry night you'll find me
Tired out and worn,
Dizzy when the daylight comes creeping,
Wish I ne'er was born
March when it's raining
And marching when it's fine,
I hear the planes rattling by above.
Pavement is my pillow
No matter where I stay!
Oh, my aching arches
Take me to the USA.

The quartet returned to sing to the tune of a well-known radio commercial:

Communism hits the spot,
Uncle Joe likes it a lot,
Customers have always said
It's a whole lot better than a hole in-the-head.
Sickle, Sickle, Sickle, Sickle

Mosquitoes, He Says

Sounds of planes flying overhead were dismissed by the announcer as mosquitoes. The noise was heard from time to time during the action.

The commissar of Cupboards and Closets was brought to the microphone to tell about housing in the Soviet Union and did so in song to the air, "Penthouse in the Sky," as follows:

Just picture a penthouse on the Red Square,
With forty-two fam'lies in residence there;
The bed's never cold
But there's lots of fresh air
In your home, sweet home.
You never lack company on the roof,
You cannot be lonesome in Moscow, forsoothe.
At parties and teas in a telephone booth
It's home, sweet, home.
If you had a flat in D. C. or old Manhattan
Then you would beg your lucky star
"Take me to USSR."
Our living conditions deserve a big plug,
In your Moscow penthouse you'll always be snug
As bugs in a rug
And we furnish the bugs for your Home, sweet, home.

A Soviet crooner sang to the tune, "Blue-tailed Fly," as follows:

Before the dawn of the red star
I starved and suffered 'neath the Czar.
Now with the pro-le-ta-ri-at
I still don't know where I am at

The chorus sang:

Stalin cracks down but I don't care,
Stalin cracks down but I don't care,
By me he is O. K.

Before the rev-vy-loo-she-yun
We never had a bit of fun,
Now joy is promised ev'ry man
When we complete the five-year plan

This time the chorus sang from "The Volga Boatman:"

Ay-ee ookh-nyem!
Ay-ee ookh-nyem!

Crooner Is Choked

The crooner was choked.

The theme song for the station's news broadcast was sung to "The Banana Song," as follows:

Buy Pravda on Wednesday and you will see
How Comrade Wallace beat the GOP.
In Pravda on Thursday Lil' Abnervitch
Saves Daisy Mae from the filthy rich.
And you mustn't miss the column
Of the inside Kremlin news—
Lucius Beebsky is the writer—
He makes Lippmann sing the blues.
And there's advice you'd better take
From Joseph Stalin's etiquette dictator,
For Russians cannot drink their vodka
In the incinerator.

The newscast, interrupted by the noise of planes, concluded with the statement: "In a private audience for J. Howard McGrath, Generalissimo Stalin said, 'I just love old Harry.'"

The roar of airplanes drowned out the radio station and four aviators enter in the uniforms of the royal air force, the Army Air Force, the Navy Air Force and the United States Army. These closed the act with the Air Force song:

Here's a toast to the host of those who love
The freedom of the Sky.
To our friend we send a message of hope
From our men who fly.
We drink to those who gave their all of old.
Without a rift, they never drift, our airmen bold
A toast to the host of men we boast —the Allied airlift.
Off we go into the wild blue yonder,
Flying high into Berlin,
Valiant men tear the blockade asunder.
At 'em boys! And we will win!
Here we come bearing a rich new cargo,
Here we come bearing our gift.
In echelon we carry on.
Nothing'll stop the Allied airlift

In Albany of 1648

Republicans were satirized in a scene laid in Albany in 1648. Characters appeared in Dutch Colonial dress and as Indians. The stage represented the frontier stockade of "Old Fort Tomato," where the club examined "the future of the Republican Party's past."

Dr. George Gallup was summoned to explain what happened in the election. The orchestra struck up "Sweet Mystery of Life," and the pollster sang:

Ah, sweet mystery of life, we have not found thee.
Ah, we do not know the secret of it all.
All the canvasses, projections and percentage—
The ouija board, the magic wand and crystal ball.
Oh, from poll to poll to poll we have been seeking,
Elmo Roper, Crossley, I all made it pay—
But the answer put an end to all our striving—
The votes were counted on election day!
Oh, from poll to poll to poll we have been seeking,
Elmo Roper, Crossley, I all made it pay—
But the answer put an end to all our striving—
The votes were counted on election day!

An incident of the campaign was recalled as an engineer sang to the tune "Rambling Wreck from Georgia Tech:"

Oh come you wise Republicans and listen to all my strain,
And never trust yourselves again aboard a Vict'ry train;
I hope you've learned your lesson,
The meaning's mighty clear—
I'm a rambling wreck, but what the heck,
I'm a lunatic engineer!
I'm a rambling wreck, but what the heck,
I'm a lunatic engineer,
A lunatic lunatic lunatic lunatic lunatic engineer
Like all good jolly fellows
I like my signals clear,
I'm a rambling wreck, but, what the heck—
I'm a lunatic engineer!
I'm a rambling wreck, but what the heck,
I'm a lunatic engineer,
A lunatic lunatic lunatic lunatic lunatic engineer
Like all good jolly fellows
I like my signals clear,
I'm a rambling wreck, but what the heck,
I'm a lunatic engineer—
I'm a lunatic engineer!

The Votes Fell Short

Herbert Brownell, Dewey Campaign manager, called upon Edward Jaeckle, another Dewey strategist, to tell what happened and got his reply in song to the tune, "The September Song:"

Oh it's a long long while
For me to remember,
But the votes fell short
When we reached November.
When the autumn weather turned the leaves to flame,
We didn't have time for a diff'rent game,
Oh the vote settled down, it refused to roam—
Remember, November!
And all those precious votes, they stayed at home—
Those precious votes—
They stayed at home.

A character, announcing himself as, Rip Van Hoover, entered to sing to the tune, "Blue Moon:"

Blue Moon, you saw me standing there free,
Without a dream in my heart.
No leader right except me!
Blue Moon, you knew just what I was therefor.
You heard me saying a pray'r for Someone I really could care for!
And then there suddenly appeared before me
The only one the party said would please.
I heard somebody whisper, "Don't ignore me,"
And when I looked, the moon had turned to cheese!
Blue Moon, once more I'm standing here free,
Without a dream in my heart,
Nobody in step—but me!

Gov. Earl Warren of California, was introduced to sing to the strains of "San Francisco:"

Sacramento, open that State House gate,
Don't make your old friend wait
Outside your door.
Sacramento, here is your wandering one
Saying "I'll wander no more."
Running on the national ticket left me flat—
Tell the folks at home I'm still a Democrat.
Sacramento, welcome me home again,
I'm coming home to go roaming no more!

Governor Dewey was called upon to explain why his campaign went flat and chose the tune "I'll Sing the Songs of Araby,"

I sang them songs of Albany
And tales of my great team.
On unity—that lovely word,
I really let off steam.
With nice platitude I tried to make Sweet White House visions rise.
But all my speeches seemed to wake
Was wonder in their eyes.
But all my speeches seemed to wake
Was wonder in their eyes.
Ah unity, where thou?
Ah who's unscrambled, now?

Would Have Had a Chance

The skit closed with a song from a character, who introduced himself as "the Chinaman the Republicans should have nominated." To the air "There's a Great Day Coming, Manana," he sang:

There's a great day coming, tomorrow,
It's grand old Republican dream.
Ev'ry lost candidate can forget 'forty-eight,
We'll have much higher rating, tomorrow!
We'll have House and Senate tomorrow
And the White House, with bright lights agleam,
All our skies'll be blue
All our cares'll be few,
No more Hoover and Dewey tomorrow—
There'll be high times, pie in the sky-times,
So come you mourners and pick your plums;
There's a great day coming tomorrow,
If tomorrow ever comes!

The Democrats had the heat of humor turned under them in a skit laid in Iowa, where Vice President-elect Barkley, billed as "Jeeter," was awakened to be told by a character portraying Representative Sam Rayburn, that he was in Iowa for the victory corn-husking to thank the State's voters for being "so good to Harry."

Barkley sang to "Dixie" as follows:

Oh, Dixie land am now forgotten
We raise corn, we don't plant cotton
Ioway, Ioway, Ioway Democrats
Farm subsidies are paid in money
Some folks say the money's funny
Ioway, Ioway, Ioway Democrats.
Now we won't go back to Dixie
Hooray, hooray!
In Ioway, we've come to stay until in 1950
And then we'll all go back to Dixie
Away, away, away down South in Dixie.

It's Magic, McGrath Sings

J. Howard McGrath, Democratic chairman, told how Mr. Truman won the election in song to the air, "It's Magic:"

He smiles, the voters shout;
He speaks, and there remains no doubt,
It's magic!
No hope was justified
Yet voters nestle at his side.
It's magic.
He had no golden voice or mystic charms,
Just Wall Street "gluttony and greed" were his alarms.
He cast his winning spell
By merely giving Congress hell.
It's magic.
How else did he attain
Success in his one-man campaign?
It's magic.
Let me explain it now
Those things that puzzled the GOP.
They soon must realize our magic's name is just Harry!

A policeman announced that several characters were outside, including a woman, carrying a baby, who described herself as "Miss Dixiecrat." Governor Thurmond entered introducing Senator Lister Hill of Alabama, Boss Ed Crump

ADAMS WILSON STOKES BUEL LEACH WOOD

Phelps H. Adams, Washington correspondent of the New York Sun, retiring president of the Gridiron Club, opened the annual banquet last night with the traditional "speech in the dark." Richard L. Wilson, Washington correspondent of the Des Moines Register and Tribune, was elected president for 1949 at the annual meeting before the dinner. Thomas L. Stokes, United Features Syndicate columnist, was elected vice president. Reelected to their old posts were Walker S. Buel of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, treasurer; Paul Leach of the Knight newspapers, secretary, and Lewis Wood of the New York Times, historian

Britain And Israel

Mr. Churchill, in the House of Commons on Friday, made one of his rare interventions of recent years in the matter of Palestine. Of late Mr. Bevin's stubbornness has been the object of a growing criticism among the members of all political parties. Mr. Churchill, who a year ago called the Bevin policy "the outstanding item in a catalogue of incompetence," on Friday demanded the end of Britain's "sulky boycott" of Israel. The boycott is more than sulky, it is ridiculous. The British have been reduced to such measures as signing postal treaties with the 200-odd postoffices in Israel's jurisdiction instead of one with Israel itself. But there is tragedy in this attitude—the lag in recognition is helping the Soviet world to hold diplomatic leadership in Israel.

At one time Mr. Churchill used to be more active in his commentaries on Palestine. Particularly was he vocal in the debate 10 years ago when partition was broached in the Peel Report. He thought that this partition proposal was drawn in a way that discriminated against the Zionists. But his chief concern was for action. Whatever deficiency there might be in the Peel plan, he thought the plan was less important than decision. When the government of the day shelved the Peel Report, he inveighed against its "temporizing and drifting." The same complaint he makes equally against present policy. Indeed, the British government has committed another error against which Mr. Churchill warned, namely, not to give the impression to the world that policy on Palestine was guided by merely a narrow-minded strategy.

It is clear that at present the Israel government is thinking of a future when cooperation with Britain can replace conflict. How long this will govern Israel depends upon British policy. It almost seems as if the British were intent upon pushing Israel into Soviet Russia's arms. The trouble is that the British have influenced the United States both in keeping American recognition de facto and in procrastinating in the United Nations. If there had been more leadership by the United States, it seems to us, action could have been taken during the present Assembly on Israel's request for membership in the U. N. How can we expect to keep Israel disciplined and responsible if she is kept out of the family of nations? The delay in recognition simply plays into the hands of Israel's extremists.

Retail Trade Worries

The drop in November department store sales from the level of a year ago reverses an upward trend that has been in evidence since the end of the war. In an address before a retail trade group, Dr. Ralph A. Young, assistant research director of the Federal Reserve Board, pointed out that department store sales "have been moving ahead—on a free inflation ride—at extraordinary percentage rates in comparison with preceding year sales. Suddenly the gain is converted from a plus to a minus figure. The conversion in itself is sufficiently dramatic to give one something to think about." Dr. Young conceded that the November sales drop might be partly explained by abnormally warm weather, consumer reaction to election returns, temporary price uncertainty, or a return to prewar seasonal buying patterns. However, the sudden shift in the trend of retail buying strongly indicates that the ability to buy of a good many consumers has been cut down by inflation at a time when the supply of consumer goods is becoming more abundant. The growth in consumer debt and in what Dr. Young calls "fixed commitment savings" (insurance payments, for example) also reduces the amount of money available for free spending.

In the light of this analysis, it might be concluded that the restraint on spending resulting from the reimposition of controls over consumer installment credit is not only unnecessary but ill-timed. On the other hand, it can be argued with good reason that restraints on inflationary spending by consumers, particularly on the kind of spending that is encouraged by too easy credits, has a salutary stabilizing influence. For it minimizes the danger of present overbuying, with inevitable sharp declines in buying later on. Dr. Young rather significantly emphasizes the desire of the Federal Reserve Board to employ consumer credit regulation as a stabilizing influence and a corrective of unsound tendencies in the consumer credit field. Although he concedes that the regulation is having some anti-inflationary effect, he thinks that the slowing down of durable goods sales is not entirely the result of installment credit regulations, but "also reflects the influence of broader economic forces working to lessen consumer demand, including demand of cash buyers."

If the forces at work to bring about relaxation of inflationary pressures should gain ascendancy, the pressure on Congress to refuse an extension of the authority to regulate consumer credits, which expires next June, will be great. It is to be hoped legislators will not yield to such importunities, since consumer credit regulation is not simply a device for curbing inflation but also a means of promoting greater stability in the economy. It is, moreover, a flexible instrumentality of control that can be used to counteract deflationary tendencies as well as to restrain inflationary forces.

Of Police

The controversy over Superintendent Barrett and his auxiliary police adds interest to the words of Mrs. Oksana Kasenkina, spoken as she was leaving the hospital where she had recuperated from the injuries which resulted from her melodramatic jump out of the window of the Soviet Consulate in New York. Among various reasons given by Mrs. Kasenkina for wishing to remain in the United States rather than return to Soviet Russia was the following:

> The American police are different from the Soviet police. The American police protect you; the Soviet police destroy human beings.

There is no doubt that the New York police protected Mrs. Kasenkina. Had they not invaded the yard of the consulate where she lay in agony and supervised her removal to the hospital, it is highly improbable that she would be alive today. Throughout her long convalesence they guarded her from molestation, and, as some would say, from the danger of assassination. Mrs. Kasenkina has abundant reason for her gratitutde.

The point, however, is that Mrs. Kasenkina expressed as accurately as anybody could have done the only rational justification of the existence of any police force. The whole duty of the police is the preservation of lives and property of citizens and of decorum in public places. When the police are encouraged or permitted to exceed these functions they become a serious danger to the well-being of society and a potential instrument of tyranny. They are no longer protectors but captors of the citizens.

Some societies manage to get on very well without policemen. These are the simpler societies where there is little or no change in the character or in the economic status of the population, where the rule of custom is powerful enough to govern all, and coercions are accordingly unnecessary. The existence of a professional police, then, is an evidence of a complex and urbanized civilization and of a population which is not bound by any common tradition and shares no common norms of conduct. Such societies tend to become increasingly anarchic. Hence the necessity of a organized and quasi-military power to compel obedience to the laws.

However, the task of compelling obedience becomes steadily more difficult as the structure of the society grows more complex and as the laws become more numerous and efforts to evade them multiply. The police are driven of necessity to seek constant enlargements of their powers and jurisdictions. As the difficulty of enforcing the laws increases, so does the temptation of the police themselves to override the laws in the interest of justice, as for example, in the use of torture to extort confessions. This is probably what Chateaubriand meant when he asserted that the police of their nature are antagonistic to liberty.

All this has been recognized by most political philosophers; Plato, for example, saw in the bodyguards demanded by demagogues the transition from an anarchic democracy to a ruthless tyranny. The truth is that every dictator is helpless without a powerful police; but it is also true that the mere existence of a powerful police force opens the possibility of dictatorship, at any rate where the populace is disarmed and where the military remains quiescent or neutral. This, of course, is why in our day the Communists, when they gain admission to ministries under parliamentary coalitions, always strive to place their members in the offices which have control of the police functions.

Fair Practices

Three months ago we castigated the Washington State legislative committee on un-American activities, then inquiring into alleged Communists on the University of Washington faculty. Relying on information from reputable sources, including material published in a Seattle paper, we compared the Canwell committee's procedures with those of the Thomas committee as being similarly a threat to the constitutional rights of American citizens. We were spanked at the time for our strictures, by the Yakima Republic in particular, which said our reaction reflected "the line of opposition faithfully followed by left wing groups."

Later information indicates there was, indeed, an exaggeration in our strictures, and we are glad to make amends. According to President Allen of the University of Washington, "the Legislative Committee has avoided the smearing of honest and sincere liberals on the university faculty and, in its hearings, confined testimony to cases where there was an actual question of Communist Party membership." Other observers, who are not so directly involved, do not go so far in exonerating the committee. They feel that while the Canwell group was not above criticism on its methods, these were not as bad as those of the Thomas committee. However, we take President Allen's word for it.

At the same time, our basic point remains. This was that legislative committees of inquiry can do their work of developing facts without using the techniques of the smear, the blanket accusation, the one-sided hearing, the publicity floodlights, and so on. Whatever happens in the State of Washington, we hope Congress will adopt a code of fair practices for its own committees.

One Air Force

Superficially there is much to commend Lieut. Gen. James H. Doolittle's proposal for an amalgamation of the Air Force and the Navy's air arm. There is no doubt that the Navy-Air Force feud has been one of the worst jokers in unification. As General Doolittle says in his article in Air Force, "We actually have two self-sufficient, competing Air Forces, each planning to win the war in its own way . . . We cannot afford this luxury—this prodigality." On paper, at least, his idea of an intimately coordinated "Army operating on the ground, a Navy operating on and under the water and an Air Force operating in the air" looks sensible.

The hitch comes in deciding which version of air strategy is to prevail. It is no secret that many of the Air Force planners who think in terms of long-range bombing regard carrier-based planes as something of a nuisance. Naval zealots, on the other hand, deprecate the present possibilities of long-range bombing from land bases and stress the offensive capabilities of carrier planes. Since the Air Force is the principal offensive arm, we tend to agree with the Navy that the greatest danger lies in placing too much reliance on long-range bombing techniques that have not been conclusively proved. If amalgamation meant the silencing of all opposition to the Air Force viewpoint, it would be a perilous compromise indeed.

The point is that the Air Force-Navy feud is a symptom rather than a cause of the difficulty. It reflects the lack of fundamental agreement as to missions. The first step in a cure, it seems to us, is for the definitions of function reached at Key West and Newport to be implemented authoritatively and unmistakably. If each service will do its job without looking for new fields to encroach upon, much of the trouble will vanish. Who mans the planes is not so important as that they operate according to a single over-all plan.

The Silver Lining

It appears that Mr. Robert B. Jung, whose name, if properly pronounced, is itself an invitation to joyousness, has got the idea that, contrary to all appearances, there is still a good deal of sweetness and light abroad in the world if one only knows where to look for it.

Mr. Jung, who doubtless needs an introduction, is a German-born journalist now living in New York. There he makes a good living as correspondent for various Swiss newspapers. Mr. Jung is obliged in the line of duty to read a large number of American papers, and evidently became a bit fed up with a staple diet of crime, scandal, conspiracy, strikes, politics, war and diplomatic frustration. He began to play with the idea of a publication that would be devoted exclusively to the more cheerful sort of goings on in the world.

Accordingly he launched last week the first number of his Good News Bulletin, which he plans to send regularly without cost to several hundred persons, mostly journalists, here and abroad that he thinks would be the better for regular dosages of optimism. Gleanings for the first number appear to have been rather slim, but by dint of sedulous search Mr. Jung managed to fill eight pages which such items as one about the improvement of drinking water in a certain section of Pennsylvania, another about 50,000 Arabs finding it possible to live peaceably in Israel, another about a town in Oregon where juvenile delinquency has declined 90 per cent after the parents were made legally responsible for the behavior of their offspring, and so on.

News editors of orthodox persuasion would doubtless grow giddy with amazement if asked to make up a front page of such items as have been chosen by Mr. Jung. The approved doctrine is that the newspaper reader wants to be shocked, horrified, thrilled, alarmed, titillated, scandalized—almost anything, in fact, except to be encouraged, and the circulation analysis seem to prove them right.

But this leads to the question whether in applying such values newspapers do not help to remake the world, so to speak, in the image of their own front pages. At any rate, the tendency seems to be for the sensational to become commonplace. Thus it seems in a way a pity that Mr. Jung couldn't have been given a big daily newspaper for his experiment and a full staff of starry-eyed correspondents to report under eight-column banner lines those good deeds which, as was well said, should shine like candles in a naughty world. In this way we might be able, after a time, to obtain some measure of the influence of newspapers on popular manners and behavior.

TO DEATH

Then let us go
And marching with a song
Take the great shadow and the long,
Tremendous reaches whereto death
Compels us, knowing that beyond,
Like feathery fern uncurling from the frond,
The soul from its dark aisles of flesh will loom.
As to the womb,
So to the grave
We come, serene and brave,
Children born to light,
With hungry limbs poised ready for the flight.

Gen. Clay's Role

On December 1 Drew Pearson reported that General Clay had received a terrific lashing from General Marshall for engineering the disastrous Ruhr deal and torpedoing further negotiations on the Berlin problem, both of which actions, according to Pearson, Mr. Marshall had to back publicly to save the face of American foreign policy although he violently disagreed with them. As Pearson relays the story, Marshall, in effect, told Clay to remember that American policy is made in Washington and not in Berlin.

From what I have read in the papers and otherwise as a serious student of the German question, and from what I have seen myself while serving our Government in occupied Germany, I am personally inclined to give credence to the Pearson story. What is really the role played by our governor in Germany? Is he carrying out the orders received from the Pentagon and the State Department? Or is he high-handedly going out on the warpath all for himself?

Mr. Pearson's story of last week lays the blame squarely at the feet of General Clay; but the same Mr. Pearson told an entirely different story a few months ago. It was, then, Clay who was reportedly on the verge of resigning, infuriated over some steps Washington had taken over his head and his strong remonstrances with regard to western Germany and Berlin. It was Clay who had counseled patience and calm while Washington had unperturbedly gone ahead with measures which, in the end, brought about the deadlock we find ourselves (and the world) in at the Berlin end today.

The question arises: Which Clay is it? Is it the high-handed, impulsive, and hard-to-get-along-with Clay who has brought us into most of the mess with which we are faced in Germany (not in Berlin only) today? Or is it Clay the "peace builder" who is making and shaping our policy in Germany these days.

It seems to me to be too dangerous to leave the decisions on a situation loaded with dynamite as that in Berlin in the hands of one single man, may he be good or bad.

Prepayment Health Plans

I read with mixed amusement the article in the November 30, Washington Post on Dr. Poul R. Hawley's statement to the State Medical Association of Secretaries and Editors.

According to your reporter Dr. Hawley advocated "wide expansion of voluntary prepayment plans on a professional directed level." He generously accords the consumers minority representation in medical and hospital prepayment plans.

On the other hand Dr. Hawley stated: "Not yet are they (the voluntary plans) offering a fully acceptable solution to the problem, and the principal reason for this failure is to be found in the attitude of organized medicine toward them."

Apparently what Dr. Hawley is saying is that prepayment medical plans will operate best under the professional direction of organized medicine, even though organized medicine to date has been their greatest obstacle.

Fortunately consumers in Washington followed a different approach, and organized the highly successful consumer-controlled Group Health Association—an organization which is recognized throughout the Nation as one of the country's leading prepayment medical and hospital plans. Medical affairs are in the hands of the medically trained physicians, the business of the organization is controlled by a board of trustees elected by and from the members. GHA's success, I think it is fair to say, can hardly be traced to support by organized medicine.

If progress is to be made in the voluntary prepayment medical care field, it will come primarily through organizations operated in the consumers' interest rather than through groups hamstrung by the controlling hand of organized medicine. Such plans, too, will welcome the advent of national health insurance, for they realize how large a segement of our population cannot afford adequate medical care even when it is provided in its best and most economical form through prepayment group medical plans.

Forcing Unification

The recent presidential order compelling high ranking officials of the three services to keep silent as to proposed budgetary needs again calls to mind the problem of the progress of unification. I think that the citizens of the country are entitled to a detailed report on the progress of unification, consistent with the requirements of security, giving information on what substantial consolidations of plant, purchasing techniques, research programs and so forth, has been accomplished.

If the country had such a detailed report it could better judge the propriety of service needs. If we have had only a token unification so far, of which there are indications, it would perhaps be wise for the Congress to compel specific unification through the sanction of lowered appropriations where possible.

Ruhr Control

I wish to add my voice to that of those other apprehensive persons who are noting with alarm the danger of another repetition of the fatal mistake made by the Western powers regarding the disposition of the Ruhr.

How can we hope to convince the peoples of Europe, and most especially the Russians, of the sincerity of our protestations of desire for peace and friendly relations, when we continue our efforts to turn back the arsenal of Europe to its cartel-minded former owners?

I am wholeheartedly in favor of giving the control of the Ruhr industrial area to either a council made up of representatives of the small countries such as Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, Mexico, New Zealand, or to the International Cooperative Alliance.

Beigin's Service

A few days ago I wrote a letter in answer to your November 25 editorial on Mr. Manachem Beigin, head of the Irgun Zvai Leumi (Palestine Jewish underground). I was very much disturbed to find that in your issue of December 7 you printed only one paragraph and omitted completely that part of my letter which disagreed with your editorial opinion of Mr. Beigin and the Irgun.

In my opinion when all the facts are known to the world, the "outrages" in Palestine will be seen to be the acts committed by a ruthless, illegal British government against the almost defenseless Jewish people in Palestine and against helpless refugees—not by the Irgun.

I am convinced that the day will surely come when Mr. Beigin and the Irgun will take their places with the heroes and idealists of every age and every nation who are willing to lay down their lives for the freedom of their people

Costa Rica's Example

The news we received from Costa Rica must have been quite a shock to those who have accused this republic of being a threat to the peace. The government of President Figueres announces the disbanding of their armies. They prefer education to arms; the protection of inherent rights of citizens to oppression; the raising of the standard of living of all and not the privileged few hirelings. While Costa Rica sets an example to the Americas, the three tyrants of Honduras, Nicaragua and Santo Domingo continue to arm.

Does a desire for peace and advancement or progress, such as Costa Rica, El Salvador and Guatemala have had, constitute a threat to the peace? Is it not quite the opposite—that the denial of basic human rights, sustaining large armies and air forces not for defense but for offense and for oppression within Honduras, Nicaragua and Santo Domingo constitute a threat to hemispheric peace?

Costa Rica always; Guatemala and El Salvador after they rid themselves of their dictatorships, have been good examples of how a democracy can function. With men like Figueres and Otilio Ulate in Costa Rica Castaneda Castro in El Salvador and Arevalo in Guatemala, there is no fear of oppression and tyranny, like the one suffered by the people of Honduras, Nicaragua and Santo Domingo. Zuniga Huete of Honduras, if he is able to leave his country alive, can verify this statement.

In one of his speeches about freedom of the press, the President of El Salvador, a leader in his own right, very well epitomizes the thought of the democratic people of that country. He said: "Public opinion cannot exist where freedom of the press is denied and without public opinion democracy is a myth. The press should denounce mistakes and maintain alive the feeling of nationality; it should be the guide and with its postulates of morality prevent the abuses of power and of demagogues . . ."

Let me also quote from a speech made by President Arevalo during his campaign in 1944. His words are still of actuality. He said: "I believe there is no need to ridicule the word democracy, accepting the 'collaboration' of several Nazi governments of Central and South America to fight Hitler.

"The United States in its passion to annihilate the European enemy, as yet has not had the time to notice that in this great family of 'united nations' there are some nations of this ambiguous America, that are organized, directed and enslaved by an authentic Nazi system as repulsive as the European and more dangerous and repugnant to us than the European . . .

"Only a dastardly desire of staying in power, might have guided them to gag their own consciences as enemies of democracy when they signed the treaty, which they continue to infringe with their actions."

Fortunately for Central America and their people, there are still men like Figueres, Ulate, Castaneda Castro and Arevalo to protect their rights always.

Need For Information

NO AMERICAN visitor to western Europe who compares the present living conditions there with those of a year ago will question the need for the Marshall Plan. And if he had any doubts they should be dispelled by the campaign the Communists are waging against the Marshall Plan. All strikes in France and elsewhere have for their objective to hamper and, if possible, to reduce to nothing the beneficial effects of the American aid to European recovery.

But the need for the Marshall Plan having been proved beyond doubt, one still may—and should—legitimately ask a very important question: Does the Marshall Plan in its present form really give its best? This is not only a most important question but an extremely complex one. It raises many issues and requires a thorough examination on different levels. Before evaluating it on the economic level, let us examine it on the strictly psychological level:

Is the non-Communist western European fully aware of what the Marshall Plan means both to him and to us? We know that a year ago he welcomed our aid but suspected our motives. In Britain 57 per cent of the people feared that we wanted "a say in running Britain's affairs." In France 47 per cent suspected that the Marshall Plan was dictated by our "need for foreign markets to avoid a depression."

SINCE THE Marshall Plan went into effect it has been much easier for us to allay British fears than French suspicions. Moreover, our disagreement with the French on the Ruhr has made many Frenchmen, together with General de Gaulle, suspect that we are using the Marshall Plan as a "club" to impose upon them the very unpopular policy of rebuilding the German steel industry.

But what is psychologically even more important, the Marshall Plan works in such a way that a non-Communist western European who is directly or indirectly the beneficiary is too often unaware of it. As a matter of fact, the American taxpayer is today more conscious of the financial burden which he voluntarily accepted, than his opposite number on the other side of the Atlantic is conscious of the benefits which he receives from the voluntary contribution of the American taxpayer.

Let me take the case of a western European industrialist who wants to use the Marshall Plan. A textile manufacturer in northern France, for instance, wants to modernize and expand his factory, for which he requires $240,000 worth of American machinery. He goes to the Palais Talleyrand, the ECA offices in Paris, to find out whether he can have Marshall Plan credits to buy the needed machinery in the United States.

He is very politely received but told that it is up to the French government to decide whether this machinery is really necessary for French recovery. He crosses the Place de la Concorde and the Seine and goes to Quai d'Orsay 53, which houses the European counterpart of ECA—the Office of European Economic Cooperation — where the French government is represented together with the other 16 western European nations.

THERE he is politely referred to the French Ministry of National Economy. After a long and burdensome inquiry involving an incredible amount of red tape—unless he has influential friends—he may obtain the import license necessary for buying the American machinery. But even after he has obtained it and has signed the contract, two important psychological factors remain unknown to him:

1. Where the dollars he will pay to the American firm for the machinery are coming from.

France has, indeed, three sources from which to get dollars: the Marshall Plan, dollar credits from the Export-Import Bank and the World Bank in Washington, and, finally, the dollars that France earns by exporting her goods to the United States and other countries, whose currency can be converted into dollars. He may never learn whether out of the $240,000, the French treasury puts at his disposal $200,000 and only $40,000 comes from the Marshall Plan.

2. Whether the dollars put at his disposal are credits or grants—as he will have to pay the French government their counter value in French francs.

And if these two factors forever remain a mystery to him, they will be even a greater mystery to the 60 workers in his plant at Elbeuf, France, who are precisely the people to whom we want to make clear that we, not the Communist leaders of their trade unions, are their real friends.

ECA is certainly doing a great job in providing American machinery for French workers. But this job would be a complete success only if the French workers were to become aware of it.

How to achieve this will be examined in the next article.

Matter of Fact

Secret Stuff on Light Switches

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

IT IS HIGH TIME for the affair of Alger Hiss and Whittaker Chambers to be placed in some sort of sensible perspective. The State Department certainly has not helped much, by nervously asking the House Committee on Un-American Activities to lock up much of the contents of Chambers' microfilm-stuffed pumpkin. In fact, those who should know best say that the full texts of the Chambers documents would bore most people to tears.

As reliably described, the papers fall into five categories: First, full texts of cables from the Paris and other embassies; second, sets of typewritten sheets containing brief summaries of cables; third, three such summaries in what is alleged to be the handwriting of Alger Hiss; fourth, certain notes on Naval Intelligence reports in the handwriting of another official whose name has not yet been disclosed; and, fifth and finally, original copies of completely unimportant Navy technical orders on such fascinating topics as light switches.

For anyone who remembers the dark Munich period, the documents may have a certain nostalgic interest. From London, it is understood, former Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy reported that the then Italian Ambassador Count Grandi was made very happy by Neville Chamberlain's accession to power. From Berlin, the American charge, Prentiss Gilbert, sent word that representatives of the small European neutrals were fearful that the United States would encourage Britain not to appease Hitler. And from Paris came the report that one of the sillier French ministers, Yvon Delbos, had been much cheered up by Hitler's interest in the "humanization of warfare."

Sidelight on Stilwell

BESIDES REAMS of such stuff, there are apparently one or two documents of slightly more recent significance. A long intelligence report from China, for instance, shows that Colonel, later General, Joseph W. Stilwell sympathized with the Chinese Communists even in 1938. Add up the whole, however, and the best judges assert there is not a line, a fact or an incident which should cause a tremor in any Foreign Office in the world today, unless Foreign Offices are wise enough to tremble to see what fools eminent statesmen could be in those tragic years before the Second World War.

If the documents disclose anything at all, in short, they prove that the security of the American Government was then virtually nonexistent. But everyone who is reasonably well-informed has always known that was the case. Right down to and after Pearl Harbor the State Department's codes were considered to be so hopelessly insecure that President Roosevelt customarily passed his more important messages through the Navy communications net. The chances are that most of these very documents, secured by Chambers with such toil and fear, were far more easily obtained by the cryptographers of half a dozen foreign nations, by the simple expedient of decoding radio intercepts.

Furthermore, this absence of American security in the years up to the outbreak of war was a natural phenomenon, resulting from the obvious fact that the United States did not then have a foreign policy. We have now acquired a foreign policy, and with it we have acquired an elaborate security system, widely admired and envied abroad.

A Valuable Lesson

WHAT THE PRESENT proceedings thus boil down to is simply an attempt to prove whether the individuals accused by Chambers, such as Hiss and the late Harry White, are or are not guilty as charged. The trial of individuals is surely a matter for the courts, and not for committees of Congress.

In the present instance, it is true that if the accused plead the statute of limitations (which Hiss emphatically has not done), the case against them will collapse. Chambers says he began to be alienated from the Communist Party in 1937, which was why he began to keep the documents transmitted to him by his contacts. He says further that he left the party, and ceased to receive documents, in the spring of 1938. His story really ends over 10 years ago.

At the same time, the shocking unfairness of such heroes of the House Un-American Committee as the unmourned J. Parnell Thomas, has tended to obscure the sober service rendered by Representative Richard Nixon. Nixon's shrewd persistence led to the current disclosures. It is valuable to have our past lack of security brought home to us. It is valuable also to have it brought home, once again, that the Communist Party is, in essence, a party of espionage agents.

But in order to capitalize on these values, it is time to stop the sound and fury, and to begin the more serious business of considering whether legislative or other remedies are still needed. In the existing atmosphere, this task can best be assigned to an independent commission of distinguished men, commanding the same general confidence as the Royal Commission that did such good work in Canada.

Bugs Bite The Dust

By Alton L. Blakeslee
Associated Press Science Reporter

NEW YORK, Dec. 11.—For health and comfort, bugs were put on the skids in nearly 2000 United States communities last summer, two surveys show.

The drives were community-wide, waged with new and old insecticides spread through city streets, over marshes and garbage dumps, at resorts and beaches. Some used airplanes, some trucks, jeeps and motorcycles. Some used fogs and some sprays of pest-killing chemicals.

Flies and mosquitoes were the main objectives. While methods varied, the bug campaigns now appear to be a new pattern of community health activity.

The Junior Chamber of Commerce reports that 1500 of its member branches started or supported city-wide campaigns. Many were directed against flies to reduce dysentery and other fly-spread diseases. A Public Health Service report credits such campaigns with reductions of 30 to 80 per cent in infant diarrhea.

At least 600 cities are using fog machines for war on a variety of insects, according to a survey by the Todd Shipyards Corp., makers of fogging equipment. These range from a Texas town of 500 population to two crowded boroughs in New York City.

Last summer some cities and towns used fogs or sprays to cut down the number of flies during the polio season. Certain flies can carry the infantile paralysis virus, but there is no evidence yet that the disease is spread to human beings by flies.

Helicopters Help

IN A typical campaign, one big city set aside a week in July for its war on mosquitoes and flies. Hand sprayers were used on 120,000 garbage cans, while a helicopter sprayed big dumps. A fog machine covered garbage trucks and spread a fog through residential streets. In some cities, "fly cops" on motorcycles shoot insecticides into sewer catch-basins to kill insects that escape other measures.

Costs vary from a few hundred to thousands of dollars. Because of costs, summer campaigns usually are planned in advance for best results.

Some cities use personnel and vehicles of fire departments or sanitation departments. Some hire airplanes or helicopters; some buy or rent special spraying and fogging equipment. Aerial fogging and spraying can cost from $125 to $250 an hour.

Sometimes residents pay $1 or $2 a month for the control work. Civic organizations and businessmen often underwrite part of the costs.

In one Adirondacks resort plagued by pesky black flies, a 4000-acre territory was covered through use of a helicopter and two ground fogging machines. The town's planning commission reported a 20 per cent increase in business, at a cost of $9000 for the fly campaign.

Some insecticides can be harmful to animals, fish and even human beings in too strong doses. But so far these adverse effects apparently have been avoided in the city campaigns, a public health official said. Almost all are undertaken with the advice of experts, who recommend dosages and methods to suit the situation and to avoid bad effects.

Invisible light becomes red light through an invention by Luke Thorington, a Westinghouse research scientist.

He developed a powder of special phosphors to coat the inside of a high intensity mercury lamp. Such lamps are highly efficient light producers, but their bluish white light isn't flattering. The phosphors, by fluorescence, transform much of the invisible ultra-violet light from the lamp into pure red light. The blend of mercury light and phosphor light is eight times richer in red than the light from regular mercury lamps of clear glass, he said. The light is more flattering, and mercury lamps now may be used for floodlighting television and movie studios, he said. Luke's problem was to develop phosphors that could withstand the terrific temperatures in the mercury lamp.

A chemical fluid that removes shine from clothes is announced by the Vitatex Products Corp., New York City. It is said to remove shines caused by long wear or by improper ironing of several types of rayons, serges, woolens, gabardines, worsteds, cottons and other materials. The chemical (trade name Killshine) temporarily softens clothing fibers and permits them to be brushed up to restore the nap.

A new kind of tire tread containing rock salt is reported to give 30 per cent better traction on ice-covered roads than conventional treads. Developed by the United States Rubber Co., it's intended for recapping worn tires for winter driving. Thousands pieces of rock salt are mixed into the tread. As the tread wears down, the pieces of salt are released and form surface pores that grip even the slightest irregularity in the road, the company announced.

Year 2000 is Target Date

River Program Totals 57 Billion

By Fred J. Zusy
Associated Press Staff Writer

THE Nation's planners have blueprinted a 57-billion-dollar program for developing the vast water resources in our river basins.

Judging from current progress, and barring any violent economic upheavals, the plan may be completed around the year 2000.

It places major emphasis on multi-million dollar hydroelectric power projects, chiefly in the Pacific Northwest. More than 24 billion dollars ultimately would be spent on this phase alone.

Another $12,300,000,000 would go for a country-wide flood control system such as is now operating in the Mississippi and Ohio River basins.

More than $8,600,000,000 would be spent on irrigation of 16,200,000 acres of Western desert and 1,500,000 acres of potential rice lands in southeastern Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas.

Another $6,200,000,000 would be spent for navigation improvements on inland waterways, to aid cheap barge transportation of such bulk commodities as coal, ore, grain, gasoline and fertilizers. Waterways now carry more than 28 billion ton-miles of freight annually.

Soil-Saving Work

THESE are the other programs outlined by the Army engineers, who drew up the plan:

More than four billion dollars for watershed work, aimed at saving surface soil, improving farm production and reducing floods. This would be accomplished by such means as replanting of bare lands, forest management and terracing.

One billion, three hundred and sixty-five million dollars for pollution control.

Four hundred and fifty million dollars for preservation of fish and wildlife and development of recreational facilities.

Three hundred and seventy-five million dollars for draining 15,300,000 acres of land which could be used for farming. Most of this work would be in the Pacific Northwest, the Gulf Southwest and the lower Mississippi Valley.

Water storage for cities and industrial users and control of the tidal rush of salt water into parts of some rivers and canals is also included in the general plan.

The program as a whole covers more than 160 separate river basins in the country.

16 Per Cent Started

LIEUT. GEN. R. A. WHEELER, chief of Army Engineers, estimates that in the past 40 years about $4,780,000,000 of the overall program has been completed. In the past 10 years other projects which will cost $4,590,000,000 were begun. Congress appropriated more than one billion dollars for these projects in the 12 months ending next July 1.

Work already done and underway, Wheeler says, is 16 per cent of the long-range program. If equal appropriations continue, he adds, the tremendous job could be finished "within the lives of present generations."

Wheeler estimates that prevention of flood damage and transportation savings alone would save more than 825 million dollars annually. Hydroelectric projects would develop more than 56 million kilowatts of power as planned. Sale of this power would help pay for construction.

But, Wheeler says, there are bigger considerations—including prevention of human suffering caused by floods. A sound program of river basin development, he says, "may be essential to our survival as a Nation."

"Arid and eroded lands of China and the Middle East," he says, "which once were well watered and fertile, point to the long-range future that may be anticipated if resources of land and water are not preserved."

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Truman Firm on Service Cutback

By Drew Pearson

PRESIDENT TRUMAN has put his foot down hard on the military's outstretched palm. He made this clear the other day to gruff Jim Patton, National Farmers Union chief, who called at the White House to warn that military and foreign spending was eating up too much of America's income.

"I have cut back the military budget," Truman snapped, "and it is going to stay cut back."

The President also promised that he would not forget where his votes came from last November, and agreed with Patton that his victory was the result of a farmer-labor coalition.

The President brought up one farm question that seemed uppermost in his mind—the international wheat agreement. This he praised because it would stabilize farm prices for the future.

Added evidence that the President is viewing the military budget with a cold eye was a recent unpublished letter to Defense Secretary Forrestal, ordering the services to stop sounding off in public about their needs.

Maverick-in-Wonderland

FORMER Representative Maury Maverick of Texas makes a hobby of collecting books, and recently he gave President Truman two of his choicest volumes—a first edition "Alice in Wonderland" and "Humbugs of the World," by P. T. Barnum of circus fame.

Impishly, Maverick observed that the book on humbugs might apply to poll-takers and columnists who guessed wrong on November 2. It was written during the Civil War and bore a longhand notation on the inside cover: "From the private library of Dr. W. H. Trueman, 1867."

"The good doctor may have been one of your departed kinfolk, Mr. President," remarked Maverick. "But how do you account for that 'e' in the name?"

"Could be," chuckled Truman. "I guess some of my folks forgot how to spell about that time."

The President got another laugh when his chunky, gregarious caller observed that the "Alice in Wonderland" story had a real-life parallel in the last campaign.

"You may remember that when Alice was sinking," said Maverick, "her neck began to stretch. This saved her. Well, some folks figured that you stuck your neck out when you took on the Republicans at a time it appeared they were riding high.

"However, you kept your head above the water and, like Alice, came out okay."

Dewey vs. Stassen

DEWEY and Stassen are now lining up their forces for a showdown fight for control of the Republican Party. The showdown will come at the January meeting of the Republican National Committee.

No love is lost between the two men. In fact, Dewey says privately that Stassen did him irreparable harm in his preconvention farm speeches, and that even after the convention his speeches were designed to put Dewey on the spot with farmers.

Meanwhile the anti-Dewey Republicans of Pennsylvania have "adopted" Stassen and are grooming him to be top spokesman for the "loyal opposition" against Truman. Stassen has the powerful backing of the Pews and the Mellons, while Hugh Scott is reported ready to go over to Stassen.

Dewey has taken his defeat pretty hard. Friends say he doesn't sleep well. They fear he may lose out in the political tug-of-war with the vigorous and statuesque Mr. Stassen.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S Loyalty Board issues careful confidential instructions to all FBI men who have the difficult job of checking Government employes for loyalty. Here is the confidential instruction given the FBI about the Ku Klux Klan:

"The Ku Klux Klan has at all times been avowedly anti-Negro, anti-Catholic and anti-Jewish. It seeks to deny to members of these groups the right to vote, to pursue the trade or profession of their choice, or to be free from molestation and interference in their personal lives.

"Thus, it advocates and promotes the denial to these persons and groups of their rights and freedoms guaranteed or recognized by the Constitution of the United States.

"It is actively engaged in physical violence, including killing and flogging. It has acted as a private police force in attempting to force its own code in personal matters and it has operated continuously by means of threats and intimidation.

"Between the years 1937 and 1940, according to some evidence, the Klan joined forces with the German-American Bund."

He Predicted Truman

A NEWSPAPERMAN who opposed the policy of his own papers in order to predict that President Truman would be elected, got a presidential pat on the back the other day.

He is veteran Hearst reporter Bill Flythe, who, after a recent press conference, was asked to stay after other newsmen were herded out of the room. Two presidential secretaries, Charlie Ross and Eben Ayers, steered Flythe up to the President.

Truman started off with a perfunctory handshake until Ross explained: "Mr. President, as far as I know, this is the only Washington newspaperman who predicted your election."

Then the President grasped Flythe's hand with his own two hands and pumped warmly.

"You were the only newspaperman I know who was right," beamed Truman. "None of the gang in the press room believed I had a chance."

Note—Jay Franklin was also notable as one of the very few columnists who predicted Truman.

The Gallup Poll

'Wets' Still Have a Fat Majority

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

ON the fifteenth anniversary of repeal last week, national sentiment stood substantially against a return to Nation-wide prohibition.

A total of 21,000 people interviewed from coast to coast in the past three months, representing a cross-section of the adult population, divided as follows in their sentiment on the liquor issue:

"If the question of national prohibition should come up again, would you vote wet or dry?"

Wet	57%
Dry	35
No Opinion	8

Fifteen years ago, referenda in a number of States on the repeal amendment showed 30 per cent of the voters in favor of retaining national prohibition, 70 per cent for repeal. Today's poll figure, on a comparable basis, with the no opinion excluded, would be 38 per cent dry, 62 per cent wet.

There are striking differences of opinion by sex, by age and by size of community on the prohibition issue. Greatest dry sentiment is found among women, among older people and in rural communities.

Nearly half of all women expressing opinions in the survey voted for a return to national prohibition. The men, by contrast, voted wet by more than 2 to 1. The figures follow:

	Men	Women
Wet	67%	47%
Dry	27	42
No Opinion	6	11

Among farmers interviewed the majority came out for adoption of a national dry law, the vote being:

Wet	39%
Dry	53
No Opinion	8

The average city voter is far more inclined to accept the wet point of view, as the following vote shows:

	Wet	Dry	No Op.
Towns under 10,000 pop.	52%	39%	9%
10,000-100,000	61	30	9
100,000-500,000	63	27	10

The older people become, the more they tend to adopt the dry point of view, judging by these results according to age:

	Wet	Dry	No Op.
Age 21-29	63%	27%	10%
30-49	61	31	8
50 and over	49	43	8

683,382 Skipped Vote for President

By D. Harold Oliver
Associated Press Reporter

A total of 49,363,798 ballots were cast on November 2, but only 48,680,416 were marked for President.

That means 683,382 voters balloted for State, county and local candidates, but skipped making a choice for the highest office in the land.

The 48,680,416 total vote for President is the second highest in history. In 1940, the record year, it was 49,820,213. In 1944 it was 47,976,263.

The results became available with tabulation by the Associated Press of official totals from the 48 States.

The lesser attention given to the presidential race, in contrast with many State races, is explained by the fact that there were many strong candidates and hot contests for Senate, Governor and on down the line.

Sixteen States in all showed a greater aggregate vote than the total for President.

Electors to Meet Monday

Presidential electors meet Monday in the State capitals to go through the formality of casting their votes. President Truman should get 304 from 28 States unless Tennessee gives one or two of hers to Gov. J. Strom Thurmond. Gov. Thomas E. Dewey will get 189 from 16 States, and Thurmond 38 from four, excluding that possible mix-up in Tennessee.

Truman's total vote was 24,104,836. Dewey received 21,969,500; Thurmond 1,169,312; Henry A. Wallace, Progressive, 1,157,100; Norman Thomas, Socialist, 132,138. Claude A. Watson, Prohibition, 103,343; Edward A. Teichert, Socialist-Labor, 27,921; Farrell Dobbs, Socialist Workers, 13,007, and the rest scattered.

Truman won by a plurality of 2,135,336, but it was the first time since 1916 that a winner has failed to capture a majority of all votes cast. His percentage was 49.5. Dewey's was 45.1, and the others combined 5.4.

Gain of 10 Million

Although this year's total vote was nearly 1,400,000 above that of 1944, the number of potential voters—that is, people of voting age—had increased more than 10,000,000 in the past four years.

Thus the ratio of votes actually cast was much smaller, compared with the previous two elections. This was due primarily to a falling off of balloting in the big States.

Sixteen in all showed fewer votes than in 1944. Among these were New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois and Indiana.

The apathy some citizens showed toward the presidential race was evident not only in the 16 States where the number of ballots cast exceeded the vote for President.

In five other States, individual candidates for State offices ran ahead of Truman and Dewey even though the aggregate presidential vote was higher than that for any other office.

Presidential Vote by States

By The Associated Press

Here is the State-by-State vote for President in the November election. The table shows the comparative vote in each State for 1944 and 1940, with percentages each candidate polled of the total, and the pluralities:

The "other" column includes combined votes for Wallace, Thurmond and all minor party candidates.

Radio VD Program Set

A series of 15-minute radio programs, featuring actual patient interviews in venereal disease clinics, will be broadcast this week over eight local radio stations as part of the District Health Department's war against venereal disease.

The program, "Ghosts of Yesterday," was recorded in New York City VD clinics, to illustrate the simple and effective VD treatment now possible with new drugs. Columbian University, in cooperation with the United States Public Health Service, produced the series.

The interviews will be broadcast as follows: Sunday, 10:45 p. m. on WINX; Monday, 10:30 p. m., WOL; Wednesday, 9:45 a. m., WARL; Thursday 10:15 a. m., WPIK; Thursday, 7:30 p. m., WASH; Friday, 10:45 p. m., WWDC; Saturday, 9:15 a. m., WGAY; Saturday, 12 noon, WOOK.

Satire Spices Gridiron Club Skits

of Memphis and Gov. Fielding S. Wright, Thurmond's running mate. Wright sang of Miss Dixiecrat to the tune "More to Be Pitied Than Censured:"

She is more to be pitied than censured
She is more to be helped than despised
She is only a lassie who ventured
A political path ill-advised.
Do not scorn her with words fierce and bitter
Do not laugh at her shame and downfall
For a moment just stop and consider
Civil Rights was the cause of it all.
Do not drive us all out of the party
We all sinned but we won't sin no more
And we Democrats want to eat hearty
Forgive and oh please don't be sore.

A lightning rod salesman entered to introduce an assortment of political figures who had opposed Mr. Truman's nomination at Philadelphia or his election in November. These included Frank Hague of Jersey City, Mayor O'Dwyer of New York, Senator-elect Hubert Humphrey, Jake Arvey of Chicago, Jesse Jones and Jimmy Roosevelt.

Open the Door, Harry

Arvey sang to the air "Open the Door, Richard:"

We picked Ike last summer
Felt sure he could win
Learned our lesson later

No means No to him.
We ditched Harry Truman
Voters to him flock'd
White House door ain't open
Guess we'd better knock.

Open the door, Harry
Open the door and let us in.
Open the door, Harry
Harry, why don't you open that door?
Open the door, Harry
Open the door and let us in
Open the door, Harry.
Harry, why don't you open the door?

Senator Scott Lucas of Illinois, Senate Majority Leader designate, was introduced to tell of the party's troubles. The Marine Band Orchestra struck up "Buttons and Bows:"

East is east and west is west, where we're bound nobody knows
Democrats just keep on havin'
Those trials and troubles and worries and woes,
Chiefly grief and worries and woes.

We promised much of cash and such
But our trouble always grows,
Turks and Greeks and Eastern sheiks
All count on us for a suit o' clothes.
But all we got is worries and woes.

We told all the farmers our love would never fail,
Then we told the boys from Kansas City they'd stay out of jail!
The CIO demands more dough; Willie Green gets on our toes
Can't relax—the income tax
Will leave our pockets with nothin' but holes
And we're still stuck with Chester Bowles.

Show us to the river 'cause we can't deliver
Those low-priced clothes and bungalows
And Chinese loans and Berlin zones
And here we are all worries and woes.

Tidings from Tydings

The skit closed with a character portraying Millard E. Tydings of Maryland singing directly to Mr. Truman to the strains of "All the Things You Are:"

Time and again we longed for a wizard
Someone to make our hearts beat the faster.
What did we long for? We never really knew
Winning with Harry was our adventure
Seeing him fight, our hearts beat the faster
All that we got in all of this world is you.

You are the man who gave the pledges
That may make our next four years seem long
You are the man who told the Nation
That to depend on the GOP was wrong
You are the miracle that must repeat
If we're to go ahead you can't retreat
Some day there may be peace and plenty
And some day the world will not be blue,
If all the things you said come true.

An entertainment skit portrayed Attorney General Tom Clark, Representative Karl E. Mundt of Minnesota and Representative Richard M. Nixon of California fishing in the Red Sea. The first bite which the fishermen hoped would bring in a red herring or a whale produced a minnow. The second bite brought a pumpkin overside, which contained a document conferring the Royal and Imperial Order of the Pumpkin Head on the Attorney General.

This satire of the developments in the House Un-American Activities Committee was followed by a skit which took cognizance of the face that many committee chairmen in the Democratic Congress are in their 70's and 80's.

Th scene was a schoolroom with the "kindergarten children" wearing graybeards and playing their favorite game — Congress. The children divided into two groups and chanted:

1st Group: What do we do when labor comes, when labor comes, when labor comes? What do we do when labor comes, so early in the session?

2d Group: We give them what they tell us to, they tell us to, they tell us to. We give them what they tell us to, every single thing.

1st Group: What do we do when the farmer comes, the farmer comes, the farmer comes. What do we do when the farmer comes, so early in the session?

2nd Group: We give them what they tell us to, tell us to, tell us to, We give them what they tell us to, and maybe something more.

The teacher asked Representative Adolph Sabath, 82-year-old dean of Congress, what Congress said when the National Association of Manufacturers comes and he answered, after some hesitation:

"My mummy washes out my mouth with soap when I say those words."

53 Historic N. Y. State Documents Reach Here To Undergo Treatment at National Archives

Fifty-three priceless New York State documents, scheduled to be part of the Empire State's own Freedom Train in January, arrived at the National Archives yesterday to undergo a lamination treatment that will make them almost ageless.

The fragile documents, many of them charred by the Albany capital fire of 1911, include such invaluable items as Benjamin Franklin's original Albany Plan of Union (1754), New York's first constitution, guaranteeing freedom of religion (1777)' and the Flushing Remonstrance (1653), a protest by citizens of that town against the arrest of a Quaker, one John Bowne.

They arrived from the State Archives at Albany in an ordinary brown leather suitcase, guarded by two State troopers and John Robinton, adminstrative assistant to New York librarian Charles E. Goznell.

The process that will protect the documents is the brain child of Arthur E. Kimberly, chief of the Archives processing division, who first started working on it about 15 years ago.

The lamination treatment consists of forcing sheets of transparent cellulose acetate foil under heat and pressure into the pores of the decaying document. The result is sturdy, waterproof, bug proof, and practically impervious to the ravages of time.

The documents, laid between steel plates and processed briefly in a hydraulic press, emerge almost indistinguishable from their original delicate state. Only give-away is the inch or so of cellulose edging that sticks out around each one.

Law Issues Parley Topic

Delegates from 40 States will begin a three-day conference of the American Municipal Association here Monday at the Statler Hotel to discuss the problems and policies of American cities.

The association, composed of 42 State leagues of municipalities and representing 9500 cities and towns, will concern itself mainly with long range legislative issues in the fields of civil defense, housing and municipal finance, according to the association's assistant director, Donoh Hanks.

The conference speakers include Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder, who will address the members at a luncheon Wednesday and Donald F. Carpenter, chairman of the National Munitions Board, who will speak on "Mobilization and Municipalities" at 8 p. m. Tuesday.

In other convention activities, the American Farm Bureau Federation will hold post-convention tours December 17-19 for members and delegates traveling through Washington from the federation's anndal convention now being held in Atlantic City. Visitors will be shown through the national federation headquarters and will be taken on sightseeing trips about the city.

Tonsilectomy Ward Opened

Arlington Hospital has opened up a separate ward for tonsilectomy cases, Hospital Administrator John Anderson said yesterday. Cases formerly were handled in the general children's ward.

According to Anderson, the new ward will make it easier for parents to visit children after the operation, and permit mothers to stay overnight in the room with her child in some cases.

People's Party Bid Given All Liberals

Brig. Gen. Herbert C. Holdridge, USA, retired, national chairman of the Peoples Party, has invited "all American liberals" to a congress to be held here in January to initiate a united "Peoples Program."

The congress should concentrate on devising a new economic democracy based on representation, just as our political system is based on representation, General Holdridge declared.

$120,000 Saved For Government By Civilian Ideas

More than $120,000 has been saved by the Government during the last 10 months through adoption of suggestions submitted by civilian personnel at military installations in the seven-State Second Army area.

The suggestions are predominantly for elimination of paper work and consolidation of forms J. A. Hughes, director of civilian personnel, said, although money has been saved by suggested improvements in storage methods of ammunition and perishables.

Each year the Government has accepted approximately 20 per cent of all suggestions submitted. This year 328 have been submitted thus far, and 65 accepted.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1948

Solid West Was Chief 'Success' of U. N. Session

By Ferdinand Kuhn, Jr.
Post Reporter.

THE United Nations Assembly that wound up its work in Paris this weekend can be remembered for three things.

The first was its series of smashing and relentless votes against the Soviet Union by virtually the whole of the non-Soviet world.

The second was its completion of a Declaration of Human Rights, which may be more memorable to future generations than it is today. In the same category, though narrower in scope was completion of a treaty to outlaw "genacide," or mass murder on the Nazi model.

And the third, barely reported in the member nations, was the real progress it made in tidying up the budgets of the U. N. and its affiliated agencies.

Students of the U.N. can debate for months or years whether all three of these add up to real achievement. Byron Price, the newspaperman who is now the U.N.'s Assistant Secretary General, thinks it will take 50 years to appraise the Assembly's work at Paris.

"The forecast of the professional pessimists—the people who thought the U. N. was going to blow up—has not been borne out," Price said last week as he came home from the Paris meetings.

If this was intended as a tribute to the U. N., it was singularly feeble one. The worth of an organization is not to be measured by whether or not it collapses or explodes.

An Overworked Infant

THE Assembly is less than four years old, and probably was never intended to bear the load of controversy it has had to carry. But the Assembly, like any other organization, must be judged by its decisions, its spirit and its influence for good.

Measured by these standards, the record of the Paris Assembly is far from clear, and may not be clear for years to come.

Millions of words of propaganda poured from speakers from East and West alike. Vituperation and abuse from the Soviet bloc become commonplace. Some of the Western delegates answered it with indignant denials and counter-charges; others read their newspapers or dozed rather than listen to it.

The filibuster made its first clear and recognizable U. N. appearance in these Assembly sessions. Speeches from the eastern Europeans were so long, and the replies so detailed, that they slowed up the work of the entire session, and prevented some committees from getting through the items on their calendars.

One result was that the Assembly had to arrange a renewed session starting April 1 at Flushing Meadow. At this "second part of the Third Session," as it will be called, the delegates will debate the future of the former Italian colonies, the treatment of Indians in the Union of South Africa, the relations of U. N. members to Franco Spain, and the proposed treaty on freedom of information.

Berlin Efforts Futile

WHILE the Assembly struggled through its debates in Paris without finishing its work, the Security Council made a gallant but futile effort to settle the Berlin dispute among the great powers. The Argentine Foreign Minister, Juan A. Bramuglia (who is now a guest in Washington), earned an honorable place for himself by his efforts to find a solution.

He failed, as the Assembly failed, because he could not ease the tension between the Soviet Union and the rest of the world. He was caught in the same forces that entangled this Assembly from the day it met at the Palais de Chaillot 12 weeks ago. The Assembly's plight was symbolized by a well-meant but pathetic Mexican resolution, unanimously approved, calling on the great powers to compose their differences.

Yet American officials do not for a moment believe that East-West ill-will made this Assembly a failure. They argue that the only effective way, the only possible way, to ease the tension is to convince the Soviet Union that its present course is not worth the cost.

Let the Russians see that the whole non-Soviet world is ranged against them in the U. N., and they will change their policies and become more cooperative. Such was the reasoning behind American policy at the Paris Assembly.

MEASURED by this yardstick, the Assembly session in Paris was a triumphant success. The majorities against the Soviet Union and its satellites were overwhelming, as never before in U. N. history.

In past Assemblies there was always a group of smaller nations afraid or unwilling to commit themselves on issues that seemed remote from their own interests. The Scandinavians, the Arabs and some of the Latin-Americans became known as "total abstainers" because they would rather not vote than choose sides.

This time, however, the abstainers ceased to exist. The smaller nations took their stand, and recognized that every issue, everywhere in the world, concerned them. When 41 nations lined up as they did last Thursday night, on an issue as remote to most of them as Korea, it vindicated American policy, and it could have brought little satisfaction to the Kremlin.

Balkans Tops List

THE Paris Assembly took five main political decisions, apart from approving ing the Mexican peace appeal to the great powers.

First, over bitter Soviet opposition, it condemned Yugoslavia, Bulgaria and Albania for helping the Greek guerillas, and it continued the United Nations' Balkan Commission for another year as an on-the-spot observer of the situation.

Second, it endorsed the new Republic of Korea, set up in the American zone of that divided country, and set up a new nine-nation commission as an observer and conciliator. It also recommended withdrawal of American and Soviet occupation armies "as early as practicable."

Third, it continued the so-called "Little Assembly" for another year, although the Soviet bloc had boycotted it for the past year.

Fourth, it checkmated Soviet efforts to exploit disarmament; it asked the Security Council to work out a system of receiving, checking and publishing full information on the armed forces of member nations. This was the last thing the Russians wanted.

Finally—and this may prove in future years to have been the most important issue of all—41 member nations announced that they were willing to abide by the American plan for the international control of atomic energy.

The United Nations Security Council in session, in its impressive chamber in the Palais de Chaillot, Paris

The Assembly can only "recommend," under the U. N. Charter; therefore, its 41-6 vote for the American plan has no binding force. But as a result of the Assembly's vote, private discussion with the Russians will be continued in the 12-nation Atomic Energy Commission. in the hope that persistence in secret may produce better results than debate in public.

The Assembly's social and humanitarian committee, on which Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was the American member, finished 2½ years of work on its Declaration of Human Rights. It is still only a "declaration," as its title makes clear; it has no binding force on any country.

Unquestioning Faith of a Few Top Leaders Binds Satellites to Kremlin

By Theodore H. White
(Last of Five Articles)

PARIS, Dec. 11.—Where, how and at what level Soviet policy shapes the policies of individual governments in eastern Europe is a question that bothers every western diplomatic outpost from Prague to Bucharest. No more than a handful of top Communist leaders in these countries know the exact mechanics of their relationship with Russia, and these are men whose lips stay shut. Even the shrewdest foreign observers are left with a series of hypotheses based on little more than guess and intuition.

The following is a summary of the views of various foreign observers:

The Soviet bloc, while solid as a rock, is held together neither by imperial command from Moscow nor by terror of the Red army. It rests rather on a common faith bred into the lives and emotions of the few men at the top of each of these countries.

For these men, the book of ideas was written in Russia. They act now not as puppets, but as disciples trying to prove to the master how well they have learned the craft. They are without hypocrisy when they declare that Moscow's most important continuing contribution to their governments is the lessons of experience. Their policy toward private enterprise, their gradual movement to collective farms through cooperatives, their techniques of economic planning, the operations of their secret police, are shot through with lessons from Russian experience.

Rare indeed are Communist leaders such as Rakosi in Hungary or Tito in Yugoslavia, who are so firmly in the saddle that they can create doctrine on their own. The other parties, when riven by deep squabbles, carry their differences back to Russia where the old teacher looks up the answer in the book.

National Adaptations

THIS RELATIONSHIP is changing now, for the new leaders are men saddled with vast governmental responsibilties of their own. The Cominform reflects the new association.

Its meetings, according to western diplomats who have followed them, are not called so that the law may be read by the Russian delegate. Usually the Russians bring a proposition before the group and the group discusses and criticizes its application to each country. When propositions on domestic matters strike the various countries as too fanciful, they alter and sometimes reject them.

The faith is basic. Nationalist differences still exist. Organizationally, groups like Tito's Communist Party break away, and in 10 or 20 years others may follow. But socialist change remains as a way of life which Russia first practiced; these others, whether they continue to cling to Russia or not, will continue to practice socialism as Russia taught it.

Today, however, the Cominform is buttressed by stronger ties than faith. The Russians can make or break any eastern country economically.

A sharp distinction must be made between Soviet relations with states like Czechoslovakia and Poland on the one hand, and states like Hungary on the other, which were German satellites. In Hungary the Soviets inherited as reparations from the Germans economic interests which give them vast influence over the economy.

A Halfway Welcome

THERE IS, FINALLY, the great fact of the Red army. An estimated 20,000 Soviet troops are in Hungary and 100,000 in eastern Poland guarding Russian lines of communication. There are other Soviet troop clusters 48 hours from any capital in eastern Europe. They do not exercise any political control, but they are inescapably there.

The countries' governments welcome these troops much as the British government welcomes United States B-29s now. But whereas in England the whole country is probably just as enthusiastic as the government in its reception of American planes, many an opposition leader in eastern Europe dreams how nice it would be if the Red army were a thousand miles removed.

A footnote should be added on one significant difference between Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia on the one side and Russia on the other. American correspondents are still permitted to travel freely anywhere in these countries and report without censorship. Where Russians have decided that all American correspondents are practically civilian spies, the lesser states still feel that they may be treated as human beings.

For the Eastern European states, all foreign relations are merely a projection of an unquestioning doctrine which holds this simple thesis: Western states are capitalist states; governments of capitalist states want and need war because wars make profit, and all the Western world, therefore, is composed of enemy, war-hungry governments.

In this mythology the archenemy is the Government of the United States. The doctrine has in the past three years transferred to the United States most of the evils, sins and cruel ambitions of Nazi Germany.

Germany left a scar of hatred that will be sensitive for generations. In Poland and Czechoslovakia, people tremble with an animal reaction of dread when they talk of Germany; they see the outside world only through this mist of dread. In equating Nazi Germany and postwar America in press and propaganda, the leaders are drumming away not only at foreign relations but at the most solid area of emotional support they can organize internally for their programs.

TO an American, the indiscriminate quality of anti-American propaganda is like a slap in the face. In Hungary a brilliant young Communist assured me, for example, that American manufacturers and merchants sold war goods to Hitler while the war was going on. In Czechoslovakia I was told by a Communist leader that American planes had bombed the Bata shoe factories in 1944, when they were working for Nazi Germany, because the American shoe monopoly wanted to destroy Czechoslovak competition.

The most scurrilous cartoons show the Marshall Plan as a weapon to destroy all European liberty. The Statue of Liberty is shown holding aloft the symbolic figure of a Nazi general which it cups protectively. America's war against Nazi Germany is all but washed from the record.

The picture of America in the controlled press of these governments is no more exaggerated or false than the picture of the Soviet Union and its allies given in the worst of America's newspapers. But whereas in America there is a counter-press which presents an imposing number of undistorted facts, there exists no such balancing factor anywhere in the Eastern world.

Terror of Germany

AMERICAN policy in Germany, it must be admitted, is the greatest reserve of factual support which Eastern European propagandists have at their command. The recovery of western Germany, the increase in its production, American insistence that the dismantling of Germany's heavy industry be halted, when broadcast by the Voice of America, strike terror into the hearts of people who have lived under German rule.

There are millions of Polish citizens at the same dead end of thought and hope as the woman I met while waiting for a train. She began to talk about the Russians, whom she disliked, and the present government, which she loathed.

I asked her about the Americans and she said: "You Americans, what do you leave us? Every day the Voice of America tells us about the airlift to Berlin, and what the Marshall Plan is doing for Germany. Do you expect us to love you because you feed the Germans? They let us starve and now you will fight in order to feed them."

Beneath the ranting propaganda in eastern Europe lies a deep and overwhelming need for peace. No one can come back, having spoken with officials or peasants or factory workers, and not sense how terribly they fear another war.

This is not simply the reaction of people who have fought too much and are tired. Peace is the cold political prerquisite for all that these governments plan in the future. Their production plans rest on the single hypothesis that they need set aside no productive capacity for rearmament.

Quebec Schism a Peril to Continent

By Ted Allan

ON THE eve of the important Quebec elections, Premier Maurice Duplessis climbed a campaign rostrum, glowered at his thousand - strong French-Canadian audience, and bellowed: "The federal government has been invading our province and using our resources to kow-tow to foreigners."

To his highly isolationist supporters, "foreigners" meant the United States. With that kind of campaign oratory, the heavy-set, aggressive leader of Quebec's Union Nationale barged confidently through the elections. His party routed Mackenzie King's Liberal Party to pick off 82 out of the 92 seats in the Legislature.

"Maurice has been driving around with a police motorcycle escort and sirens," said a Duplessis foe after the returns came in. "Now I suppose he will order out the elite guard."

Few Canadians share that precise fear, but the Premier's overwhelming victory has generated apprehension in top government circles on both sides of the United States-Canadian border. It's an open secret that the Union Nationale's one great hope is to break Quebec away completely from Canadian domination and, calling home a sizable group of New England's French-Canadians, establish an autonomous nation of five million. And Union Nationale leaders insist they won't permit Quebec to be dragged into another war.

"We must inflame our people's nationalism," they say, pointing out that already they have adopted an independent, provincial flag, the fleur-de-lis. "The next step to complete independence as a nation is not far off."

That the election has rocked the North American defense applecart—if it didn't actually upset it—is a more closely guarded secret. But it's known that two weeks after Duplessis' huge victory, United States Defense Secretary James Forrestal flew north to a meeting with Brooke Claxton, Canada's Minister of Defense. Observers in the Ottawa capital call the timing of Forrestal's visit certain evidence of Washington's concern over Canadian affairs. The country's domestic situation has become explosive, they say, and is threatening American as well as Canadian foreign policies.

CFF Making Inroads

EMPHASIZING the cleavage between right and left are the distinct language and religious differences in Canada. At the opposite pole to Quebec's French-speaking Catholics are the English-speaking Protestant progressives of the other eight provinces, many of whom have flocked to the support of the relatively new socialist Cooperative Commonwealth Federation.

Over the past 10 years, the CCF has grown into one of the three major parties in Canada, consistently gaining seats at the expense of the Liberal Party. In the past two elections, it won control of the prairie province of Saskatchewan—making an important cut in the power of the liberals who have held the reins of government in Canada for the past 13 years consecutively.

In an effort to bring these two opposing forces closer together, the Liberal Party looks to Louis St. Laurent, the man they elected successor to Mackenzie King, who resigned as Prime Minister a month ago. Today, the big question is—will St. Laurent be able to bring many members of the two factions back into the fold and rebuild the prestige of the Liberal Party? The consensus is not encouraging.

This former corporation lawyer, who has devoted only seven of his 66 years to politics, has an unfortunate genius for making dull speeches and poor impressions. Most acquaintances admit that he lacks the personality to rally his people around him.

Audience Walkout

HOW INEFFECTIVE this man, who follows three decades of King leadership, may be in enticing rebel forces toward fuller cooperation with the government was indicated by his unhappy failure as a vote-getter before the Union Nationale landslide.

Along with Defense Minister Claxton, St. Laurent was rushed to Quebec by Liberal Party bigwigs to turn the tide against Duplessis' provincial forces. Once, half of his audience walked out on him before he had finished his speech.

What St. Laurent's followers are counting on to stave off a national split is the deep-rooted allegiance of Quebec to the Liberal Party. Quebec, whose French-Canadian citizens represent a third of Canada's 13 million population, has been to the Liberals what the Solid South has been to United States Democrats.

St. Laurent voiced the feelings of his compatriots when he said in a private interview, "French Canadians may vote against us in a provincial election. But that has no bearing on the way they will vote in a federal election."

The first French-Canadian Prime Minister since Sir Wilfrid Laurier held office at the turn of the century, St. Laurent, along with fellow Liberal Party leaders, is banking on his heritage to bring in sufficient Quebec votes in the next national election.

Because his father was a French-Canadian merchant and his mother first-generation Irish, his followers look on him as a symbol of the unity they hope to restore in Canada.

Puerto Rico Emerging After 50 Years

By Julio Rivera
Associated Press Staff Writer

SAN JUAN, P. R., Dec. 11.—On its fiftieth birthday anniversary as a Territory of the United States, Puerto Rico finds itself far more prosperous, independent, healthy and literate than it was under Spanish rule.

Puerto Ricans, however, generally agree that much remains to be done in the way of improvement.

It was on December 10, 1898 that Spain signed away its claim to the island in the Paris treaty which ended the Spanish-American War. The treaty wasn't ratified by the United States Senate until February 6, 1899, and then by only one vote more than was necessary. But the island's government actually had changed hands the previous October 18 when the Stars and Stripes was raised for the first time.

From 1493, when Columbus discovered the island, to 1898, Puerto Rico's destiny was generally in the hands of a captain-general, appointed by the Spanish throne, who reigned supreme in military affairs and practically so in civil affairs.

First Elected Governor

SINCE 1898, the island has been coming closer and closer to autonomy. Last month, it elected its own Governor, Luis Munoz Marin, for the first time. All previous 19 Governors under American rule were appointed by the President, and the last one was the first Puerto Rican to be so honored.

Puerto Rico's first executive council had six American-born members. Now they are all Puerto Ricans. Most of the government department heads used to be appointed by the President with the consent of the Senate. Henceforth the island's Governor will appoint his own cabinet, except the auditor.

Economically and culturally, Puerto Rico has come a long way since 1898, but the facts of life on the island today still show wide room for improvement. Consider the separate phases of this island which has grown from a land of 953,000 people to almost two million:

LITERACY—In 1898, the illiteracy rate was 79 per cent. In 1940, the last census, it was 31 per cent.

SCHOOLS—In 1899, there were only enough schools for one out of 12 children. Now it's about six out of 12, which means that about 300,000 eligible children still have no school facilities. The number of schoolrooms now stands at 5600. The Insular Planning Board believes 13,500 are needed and plans are under way to provide for 8000 rooms by 1951.

ANNUAL INCOME—Last official figures, in 1943, showed an average annual income of $341 a family, which averaged 5.3 members. No comparable information is available for 1898, but in 1900 the total value of the island's exports and imports was about 19 million dollars. Today it exceeds 200 million dollars.

MEDICAL CARE—In 1911 there was one doctor for every 10,000 inhabitants. Today there are about 500 doctors, or one for every 4000 people. More than half practice in and around San Juan. The government is planning to start a new medical school at the University of Puerto Rico.

AGRICULTURE—In 1898, coffee was the island's chief product, followed by sugar and tobacco. Today sugar provides Puerto Rico with its main income, with more than one million tons produced annually. Coffee production has fallen off so much that next year the island will have to import to meet its own needs.

Both the Department of Agriculture and the newly formed Agricultural Company are trying to develop new products, such as pineapples, coconuts and vanilla, for export.

U. S. Capital Helps

INDUSTRY—Although still chiefly agricultural, Puerto Rico now has 42 new industries operating as a result of the Puerto Rico Development Co., formed by law in 1942. With the help of United States capital, Puerto Ricans now produce cement, glass, paper bags and boxes, handicraft, refrigerators, radio parts, clay products and shoes.

Experiments are under way to find new uses for sugar and molasses by-products and yeast. New industries are being encouraged in an effort to absorb the 80,000 currently unemployed on the island.

HOUSING—Principal problem now is to clear slums in the larger cities. Several large housing projects have been completed and more are on the way for middle class and low-income groups. In rural areas, the old-time "bohios"—huts—are giving way to better houses.

SANITATION—Public health units gradually are overcoming the rural prejudice against doctors and clinics. All towns have regular sewer systems, although much remains to be done in the rural areas.

TRANSPORTATION—Back in 1898, there were only about 160 miles of usable roads. Today, the roads maintained by the Department of the Interior total about 2000 miles. This does not include many unpaved country roads supervised by municipal authorities.

Principal means of transportation in 1898 was the island's only railroad. There's still only one railroad, and it's been operating under a Federal Court trustee upon a claim of bankruptcy.

Puerto Rico is training its girls to be maids in United States homes, in the School of Domestic Science at Caguas. The first graduates were sent to suburban homes in New York's Westchester County, and now there is a demand from other States for such trained help. Above is one of the classes.

Berlin's Hot Newspaper 'War' Reflects East-West Conflict

By Richard Kasischke

BERLIN, Dec. 11.—Veteran editors who recall the rough-and-tumble days of early American journalism could walk right into a real, hot newspaper war in Berlin.

Like most conflicts here, this one is part of the cold war between Russia and the west. It is not confined to ink-slinging or even mud-slinging. There is plenty of rough stuff involving Communist hoodlums and Soviet-controlled police.

There are continuing clashes between citizens who want to read or to sell the anti-Communist papers of western Berlin in the Soviet sector of the city and those who would keep them from doing either.

These are vitriolic editorial duels between the editors of the western and eastern Berlin papers.

For nearly three years the anti-Communist papers of the three western sectors and the Russian-controlled press of eastern Berlin have been feuding. It started slowly, with only occasional digs. As the rift between Russia and the west widened, the partisan press heated up correspondingly.

When the Marshall Plan came along and the Russians began their campaign to force the Western powers out of Berlin, the Communist press went all out in its attacks on the Western Allies and their German adherents.

News Kept Neutral

THE western press struck back, although it managed to retain something the Russian press never pretended to observe—comparative objectivity in its news columns. But even editorial jibes from the west were more than the Russians and the German Communists could bear.

In the late summer the Communists brought the newspaper war to a climax. They denounced western Berlin's press as a "warmongering press," and branded western editors as "warmongers" and "anti-Soviet."

Western sector papers were banned from the Russian zone. Gangs of Communists, backed by Soviet-controlled German police, forced the closing of branch offices and sales depots maintained by the western papers in eastern Berlin. Dealers who defied the orders saw their kiosks looted and were threatened with arson.

Russian-sector Germans who persisted in trying to read western papers were threatened and, in some cases, physically attacked.

Then the Communists began a news invasion of western Berlin via the elevated railway system, which the Russians control throughout the city. Communist railway police began tearing western papers from passengers. This led to fist fights on the trains. They also tried to prevent the sale of western papers in the railway stations.

This brought intervention from the western military governments. For a time the western papers could be bought on the station's ground level and the Russian-controlled press upstairs. Then, the western Berliners hit back with a dealer boycott which forced the Communist press back into the Soviet sector.

Now one has to go across town to get an eastern paper and the Russian sector residents have to come into western Berlin to get an anti-Communist sheet. Meanwhile, the daily editorial tirades continue, especially from the Communist side.

Editors 'Arraigned'

PROPAGANDA spouts as from perpetual geysers. Personal attacks are vicious. The German Communist press and the Russian official press do not shy from daily libelous attacks against Gen. Lucius D. Clay, United States commander, and other high American officials.

Four-power rules prohibiting criticism of the occupying powers by German newspapers have long gone with the wind.

Lately the chief Communist organ, Neues Deutschland, has been waging a campaign of "arraigning" western paper editors as "warmongers" and publishing "warrants for arrest" of these editors on its front page, illustrating them with pictures. The paper also runs a daily column assailing western press dispatches under the standing caption: "The Standing Lie."

The western press also devotes considerable space to deny or deride Communist propaganda charges.

Most Berliners seem to have made up their minds whom they want to believe. The popularity of western Berlin newspapers and the anti-Communist victory in the 1946 elections tend to prove that. If further proof is needed, it lies in the stanch anti-Communist resistance of more than two million western Berliners under the hardships imposed by the Russian blockade.

But there are Germans who apparently find a bitter satisfaction in the quarreling among their conquerors. These try to "get the dirt" from both factions of their press.

Then there are others still a bit confused, like the little fellow pictured in a newspaper cartoon.

Asked by his companion, "Do you read the news?" this fellow answered: "No, I don't bother. I only read the denials."

Prewar Supply of Fats Isn't Enough

(Second of Two Articles)

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

BOUNTIFUL harvests throughout the world this year have wiped out, temporarily at least, the danger of widespread famine that threatened the world less than a year ago.

But despite that great improvement, a large part of the world faces severe shortages in vital foods. In no category is this shortage more acute than in the all-important one of fats and oils.

The statistical staff of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization reported to the recent FAO conference here that this year's world production of fats and oils will be back to about prewar figures. As with all figures dealing with this subject, however, these estimates have been questioned.

Many say they are too optimistic—in fact, our own Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations of the Agriculture Department insists that FAO's figures from some areas overestimate production.

But even taken at their face value, the FAO figures point up the fact that there is a world shortage of fats and oils. In the United States, supplies are so near normal that we fail to appreciate the shortages that exist elsewhere.

A Population Offset

THERE ARE three reasons why the supply of this important food and industrial material is not sufficient:

1. The world's population has increased about 10 per cent since 1939, in spite of wars, famines and pestilences—or roughly, and again we quote FAO figures, by 200 million persons.

2. The political situation. The large supplies which formerly went into world export trade from Manchuria, China and the Netherlands East Indies have been shut off by internal wars and political disturbances.

3. The world financial situation. Large areas of the world are unable to buy necessary supplies because they lack the hard money—dollars. Dollars are needed to buy from many of the chief exporting countries, particularly the United States and Argentina, and short countries just haven't got them.

In other words, although the world's production, in volume, is very near prewar, the distribution has changed markedly, and the demand, due to increased population, is much greater.

Britain Near Prewar

AS AN EXAMPLE of this change in distribution, the FAO lists the following:

In prewar days, 1934 to 1938, the United Kingdom and northwest Europe, excluding Germany, imported an average of 2,250,000 metric tons a year. In 1947 their imports were about 2,085,000 tons; this year's most optimistic figures place them at 2,250,000 tons.

Central Europe, including Poland, imported 1,335,000 metric tons prewar; last year it imported only 175,000; this year the top estimate is 500,000 tons.

The rest of Europe, including Russia, imported 295,000 tons prewar; last year it got 130,000; this year's highest estimate is 200,000.

Japan before the war imported an average of 170,000 tons; last year it got only 20,000; this year it may get from 80,000 to 100,000 tons.

In North America, excluding Mexico, prewar imports totaled 1,045,000 metric tons; last year they were only 680,000, and this year will be about the same. But here home production has more than made up for the difference—in fact, has been sufficient to permit our exports to equal our imports. FAO gives this year's North American production—also excluding Mexico—at 3,210,000 tons compared with 3,326,000 prewar.

Olive Crop Off

ENTERING into the picture for next year is a sharp drop in the olive oil production in the Mediterranean area. Last year this crop was an outstanding one; this year, FAO figures indicated the yield will be about 60 per cent as large as in 1947-48.

In an effort to relieve the fats and oil shortage in Europe, the British government recently undertook a large project in Tanganyika, British East Africa. There it hoped eventually (by 1951) to put about three million acres into oil-bearing crops, mainly peanuts and sunflower seed.

Difficulties with the tsetse fly, the water supply and the building of roads and railroads have delayed that program seriously. Where the project called for about 1,250,000 acres in such crops this year, only about 50,000 were actually harvested. However, that is a great advance over the 7000 acres of a year ago.

The British government agency handling the project, the Overseas Development Corporation, has contracted with the East Africa Corporation, a Unilever subsidiary, for development of several hundred thousand acres. Unilever is the parent company of Lever Brothers, Inc., United States soap manufacturers.

Philippines Strained

THE FATS AND OILS shortage that the world faced after the close of the war was greatly relieved by a tremendous project in the Philippines. Philippine exports, which averaged more than 550,000 tons before the war, of course were shut off during hostilities, and the copra plant virtually destroyed by the Japs. However, with cooperation from the Army, Navy and the Agriculture Department, the islands were able to export more copra in 1946 than the prewar average—or more than 600,000 tons.

This was increased in 1947 to the enormous figure of 1,005,338 tons. To reach this figure the lands, spurred on by the shortage and high prices for copra, overproduced, so that this year the amount going into export is estimated at about 800,000 tons.

"It is reasonable to anticipate that, with the exception of Germany, fats-importing countries will obtain substantially increased supplies both from imports and domestic production for the crop year 1948-1949," the FAO report states.

"The total supply per capita will attain between 80 and 90 per cent of prewar levels as compared with 65 to 75 per cent in 1947.

"In the case of Germany, there will probably be a further increase in imports, largely conditioned by the extent to which a larger proportion of available financial resources is appropriated for what is a relatively expensive import item."

The amount available per capita for Germany, it is estimated, may be only about half of prewar.

Cigaret-Smoking 'Youngster' Heads Staid Bank of England

LONDON, Dec. 11 (AP).—Cameron Fromanteel Cobbold, at 44, is the youngest governor of the Bank of England selected in 101 years.

Next March 1 when he takes formal charge, he will direct the British government's own bank with 6600 employes, its nine branches in England and its banker-depositors all over the world.

Hollywood would be disappointed in Cobbold. He neither looks like a bank president nor lives like one.

He's a hefty, athletic 6 feet 2 inches and seems even younger than he is. He has black hair, smokes cigarets instead of cigars and has no mustache.

His dress is careless and there's no flower in his lapel. He lives in a small apartment and often rides the subway to work. He sometimes plays cricket with the bank help.

Last year Cobbold went to Washington for talks on Britain's $3,750,000,000 loan. To get this, she'd agreed to give dollars for sterling on demand in international transactions. She couldn't make good. Cobbold was in the group sent over to explain why.

His new job will mean heavy responsibility at what by Wall Street standards is low pay. The governor's published salary—though the directors may vote him more—is only 2000 pounds—$8000.

Reds Estrange 50 Million Union Men

By Ernest Agnew
Associated Press Staff Writer

LONDON, Dec. 11.—British Labor leaders have formed the nucleus of a new trade union federation to counter the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions. They're hoping to avoid a split in the WFTU, with its 70 million members in 50 countries, but they're going to be ready for one if it comes.

It's like a father disowning his son. The anti-Communist British Trades Union Congress was one of the principal organizers of the WFTU in 1945. The WFTU was to be the principal liaison agent for world labor, a clearing house for all matters of interest to labor, and a unifying agent. But, says the TUC, it has split labor over the issue of communism.

TUC leaders say the WFTU is working against the European Recovery program, which the TUC is supporting, and generally is "carrying on Communist activities and propaganda which British labor refuses to put up with."

The TUC has asked the WFTU to suspend for a year—"We feel we probably could purge the Communists from the leadership in 12 months," says one TUC official. If the WFTU refuses to suspend—and it is generally accepted in London and Paris that it will—the TUC will withdraw its membership. Formal action is expected when the WFTU executive bureau meets in Paris in January.

50 Million Strong

LATER in 1949, the TUC would announce, according to plans, that a new world federation of labor had been organized. It would act as a coordinating agent for member unions in the United States, in all the 16 ERP countries, in South America, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and British dominions; an organization of probably 40 million to 50 million members, including the TUC's eight million in 180 unions.

The nucleus for this new organization was set up here last February during confidential discussions of labor leaders from all the ERP countries.

The CIO in the United States, one of the key organizations of the WFTU, also is expected to withdraw from the WFTU, and other western bloc nations are expected to follow.

(Last month the CIO National Convention in Portland, Oreg., authorized its executive board to take any action considered necessary concerning its relationship with the WFTU. The AFL is not affiliated with the WFTU.)

"We want solidarity in the trade union movement, a unified drive of all trade union members for betterment of the workers' condition," said Herbert Tracy, an official of the TUC. "We know now that we'll never achieve it working through the WFTU as long as that organization is dominated by Communists.

"The Communists insist that the leaders of the WFTU be the masters, not the servants, of organized labor, that the executive bureau of the WFTU have powers to override any national federations. We here in Britain, in the United States, and in many other ERP countries feel that any world union headquarters has to be subordinate to its individual members."

TRACY says the TUC now pays about £ 15,000 ($60,000) in annual dues to the WFTU.

"Much of that money is used for the printing of publications in which the European Recovery Program is denounced," he says. "Those publications follow the straight Communist line. They assail the leaders of the TUC and what they stand for in organized labor. We're getting pretty sick of it."

What is the Communist strength in the WFTU? Tracy says it is centered around the Soviet, French and Italian trade unions and unions from some South American countries, "but no one can estimate with any authority the number of Communist members in the federation."

One of the key WFTU officials, he says, is Communist Louis Saillant, the secretary general, who is in charge of the Paris headquarters of the federation.

The WFTU probably is the biggest trade union federation ever organized, but it is not the first world union. In the early 1900s, the International Federation of Trade Unions was active, but it came under the domination of the highly organized German labor movement and was suspended at the outbreak of the First World War.

In 1918 the IFTU was reorganized. Soon afterward Soviet trade unions set up the "Red International of Labor Unions," which was active for about 10 years then faded out with the formation of the "All Central Council of Trade Unions of the U. S. S. R." That council holds membership in the WFTU and—in the opinion of many American and British labor leaders—has become its dominating voice.

What about precautions in the new federation against Communists again moving in and taking over?

"There'll be some," says Tracy, "but we're not ready yet to announce what they'll be. The whole project is still in the formative stage."

But, he said, there will be no ban on Communists in the new group.

Violence Marks Italy Labor Split

By Frank Brutto
Associated Press Staff Writer

ROME, Dec. 11.—A great struggle, marked by violence, is being waged in Italy to shape the future of the country's labor movement.

Two veteran labor leaders head the opposing forces: Communist Giuseppe Di Vittorio, secretary of the Italian General Confederation of Labor (CGIL), and Christian Democrat Giulio Pastore, secretary of the Free Italian Confederation of Labor (LGCIL).

Di Vittorio is fighting to hold together his split and dwindling ranks. Pastore and his followers are fighting to extend their new organization, founded after the CGIL called a national general strike last July to protest the shooting of Communist Chief Palmiro Togliatti.

That strike, Pastore charges, was politically motivated and destroyed Italian workers' faith in union organization. He says the aim of his new group is to restore that faith. Ranks of the Free Confederation are open to members of all political parties.

One Strike Averted

ALREADY there has been violence. Last month one of the Free Confederation's provincial organizers was clubbed and stabbed to death in the strongly Communist Bologna area. Pastore promptly called upon Interior Minister Mario Scelba. He claimed the attack was part of a "vast attempt at intimidation."

In labor circles there is fear violence will increase as the Free Confederation is extended. Its power already has been felt in averting (by agreeing to negotiate) a strike of short haul railroad men.

Pastore, a squat little man not unlike the late Fiorello LaGuardia in stature and action, declined in an interview to give an estimate of the size of the new confederation, but claimed it already has cut deeply into the once claimed seven million membership of the CGIL.

Although the Free Confederation's constituent assembly voted against connection with either state or church, it has moral support from the government and active, official support from church organizations.

Dollars Acceptable

ONE essential difference between the opposed labor groups is their stand on the European reconstruction program. The Free Confederation is all for it. Di Vittorio's organization grudgingly agreed to accept United States aid, but has constantly attacked the reconstruction program as an assault on Italian labor.

"Membership in the CGIL," Pastore said at his busy temporary headquarters, "never reached the seven million claimed by Di Vittorio, and I do not believe its 1948 registration hit four million.

"We hope a new workers' international will develop from the countries participating in the European reconstruction program—an organization of national union movements that are free, independent and democratic."

U. N.—From Page 1

'50 Years Is Needed' To Appraise Results

Next year there will be serious and perhaps insuperable difficulties in trying to write a convention that will make the Declaration legally binding. Yet its authors look upon it as the forerunner of a great Human Rights Treaty some day, when all nations are willing to abide by the U. N. Charter's pledge of "respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all."

In the humanitarian field the Assembly also called upon member nations to contribute 32 million dollars for Arab refugees from Palestine, and promptly advanced 5 million from its own funds. President Truman followed this by saying he would ask Congress to appropriate half of the 32 million.

Authorities on the U. N. budget feel this Assembly made greater progress than any other in tightening up the U. N.'s finances and internal organization. The budget of the U. N. itself, involving the pay and allowances of its secretariat, was stabilized at around 31 million dollars.

In addition, however, about 10 million was needed to meet the non recurring expenses of the five special U. N. commissions now on duty in trouble spots—in Palestine, Greece, Korea, Kashmir and Indonesia — as well as the extra cost of the Little Assembly and next spring's renewed session of the full Assembly in New York.

First steps were also taken to bring order out of the sprawling budgets of the U. N.'s specialized agencies. The perennial Assembly problem of a permanent headquarters was settled by accepting the interest-free United States loan of 65 million dollars for building the new U. N. capital on the East River in Manhattan.

Failures Foreordained

EXCEPT for the glaring failure over Palestine, most of the Assembly's frustrations were caused by the East-West ill-will that shadowed the entire Paris session.

Nothing could be done, for example, to admit new members to the U. N. The Russians persisted in their refusal to admit Italy, Eire, Portugal and Transjordan unless the non-Soviet nations admitted Hungary, Romania, Albania, Finland and Outer Mongolia all at once — and this the non-Soviet nations refused to do. Israel, Ceylon and Korea also are waiting for admission.

To prevent time-wasting speeches, the Secretary-General was empowered to work next year on new rules of procedure, including a cloture rule. The Russians showed every sign of resisting such limitation as strenuously as if they were Southern Senators.

But as the weary delegates scattered for home this weekend, they knew perfectly well that the Assembly could not strengthen its influence just by tinkering with its rules. Moscow would have to change its policies, and the West would have to respond, before the Assembly could become what its founders intended it to be—the Town Meeting of the World.

Bright Young Men Surround Gov. Talmadge

By Bem Price
Associated Press Staff Writer

ATLANTA, Dec. 11.—"My name," said Herman, "is spelled T-A-L-M-A-D-G-E.

"People criticized my father for being stubborn," said the new Governor of Georgia. "They said he was so stubborn he wouldn't take advice from anyone.

"Now I notice," Talmadge continued, "that if you breed a white-faced bull to a white-faced cow, you get a white-faced calf."

Talmadge was making it plain that he and nobody else was running the Empire State of the South.

During the campaign his opponents had accused him of being a stooge for certain politicians who had been close to his father, former Governor Eugene Talmadge, who was Governor-elect when he died.

His opponents, in and out of the State, predicted, too, that if Herman were elected, Georgia would be on the high road to ruin. But developments have been such that even some of his political enemies are saying that maybe he ought to be given a chance.

Friends in College

A YOUNG man himself—he's 35—Talmadge is filling the State capitol with young, active and educated men. Most of the youngsters have an intense feeling of personal loyalty to Talmadge.

Many of them attended the University of Georgia with the Governor. Some were Sigma Nu Fraternity brothers.

And why shouldn't they feel loyal, asks Benton Odum, the Governor's executive secretary and friend.

"It's up to them to make or break Herman in the next two years. They've got to make it work and they know it. Talmadge is just getting started as a politician and they've tied their political future to his.

"If this administration fails," says Odum, "they fail with it. Talmadge would be washed up and so would they. It is going to work."

Talmadge also expects it to work. He says he expects to run again in 1950.

Under Georgia law a Governor is prohibited from succeeding himself, but since Talmadge was elected to fill an unexpired term—that of his father—he considers himself eligible to run again.

Gov. Herman Talmadge (right) swears in his friend and fraternity brother, Benton Odum, as executive secretary

Easy on Race Issue

TWO of the chief planks in his platform called for a referendum before imposition of new taxes and a "white supremacy" law.

Talmadge says a voter qualification bill will be introduced at the January session of the General Assembly. Precisely what form the law will take has yet to be determined.

An aide, though, soft-pedaled the "white supremacy" angle of the Talmadge platform.

Said the aide, who asked for anonymity: "You know as well as I do that as fast as these laws come into Federal Court they are knocked out. Sooner or later the Negroes are going to vote, and there's nothing anybody can do about it.

"Our problem is to follow the transition in public opinion. "Eventually," he continued, "the people will have to become reconciled to the idea."

Talmadge said that if the next Legislature "sees fit to provide expanded State services, it will be up to them to provide the money." He said he expected no opposition to the referendum proposal concerning new taxes.

The new Governor says the merit or civil service system will be extended to the Highway Patrol. The previous administration of Gov. M. E. Thompson fired 28 veterans for "political activity." Talmadge, a naval veteran himself, says he doesn't want that sort of thing to happen again.

It's Ancient History

NOW about that fight which took place in January, 1946, when Georgia had two Governors for 67 days. Talmadge says he still believes he was entitled to be Governor by virtue of election by the General Assembly.

"The whole story was never told," says Odum.

The Talmadge crowd, however, counts the happenings as so much water over the dam. They're in, and Governor Thompson, who got the office by a 5-to-2 Supreme Court decision, is out.

Talmadge now is engaged in a high speed "economy" drive and has lopped more than 500 off the State payroll. He says he won't hire them back either. As for those he does hire, Talmadge insists that they be his friends—and competent.

Talmadge, who gives his department heads the right to hire and fire, works hard himself. He expects them to do likewise.

Miss Leta Braselton, his receptionist, who was receptionist for his father, observes, "He's just like his daddy."

Trade Policies Face a Going-Over

By Sigrid Arne
Associated Press Staff Writer

NOT since the days of Smoot and Hawley, in 1931, has this Nation's policy toward world trade faced such a thorough combing by Congress.

Congress will argue the same old issue: High tariff versus low. But this time it will also talk about the concessions other nations may be willing to make to us in return for lowered tariffs. Debate will rise on two issues:

1. Whether, and, if so, how, to extend the reciprocal trade agreements program. This is the plan under which the State Department horse-trades with other countries to gain advantages for American goods sold abroad in return for advantages offered foreign goods in our stores.

2. Whether this Government should sign the charter of the International Trade Organization, which the United States authored. The ITO was put together last year at Havana by 54 nations with the hope of cutting down world trade barriers.

Government architects of both plans state a broad purpose: To raise the world's living standards through better trade and thereby to stop the spread of communism.

Unemployment Threat

VIOLENT objections to the Government program come from some sections of American business, in particular producers of wool, woolen textiles, ceramics, some glass makers and some mining concerns.

They have told congressional committees that they fear lower tariffs will mean that foreign goods will get into our stores at lower prices. They fear they will lose sales and have to close down some of their business. They said they might have to fire some workers.

Smaller opposition groups include livestock raisers and raisers of nuts.

This is the story on reciprocal trade agreements:

The United States Chamber of Commerce is much in favor of them. It says the way to a richer and more peaceful world lies in a world slogan which it proposes:

"More and more goods at less and less cost to more and more people."

Secretary of State Marshall, in pointing out how many people the program touches, said: "Foreign policy has taken a seat at the dinner table."

Paul Hoffman, who heads the European Recovery Program and who used to be president of the Studebaker Corp., told a congressional committee:

"It has to be a two-way street. Sooner or later we have to wake up to the fact that unless we are willing to receive goods we cannot expect to receive payment. Tariff reductions should make payments easier."

World Struck Back

THE reciprocal trade program started in 1934 when the United States had the highest tariff act in its history, written by Senator Smoot (R., Utah) and Representative Hawley (R., Oreg.).

The Smoot-Hawley tariffs came into effect just when sales were dropping all over the world. They added to the price of foreign goods sold in our market. Foreign sales dropped off here. Foreigners earned fewer dollars and bought less here.

High-tariff men hoped that high tariffs on foreign goods would help keep up the price of American goods in American stores. But low-tariff men say the Smoot-Hawley tariff caused other nations to throw up fences against foreign goods (many of them ours). Many of those fences remain.

The other nations didn't rely on tariffs so much. Instead they erected various stumbling blocks to foreign goods. They limited the amount of foreign goods their peoples could buy. They taxed foreign goods moving from city to city inside their countries. They told their citizens they could buy one type of foreign goods but not another. They told foreign traders inside their borders that they could only change a part of their profits into other money.

Former Secretary of State Cordell Hull thought that if each country gave in a little we would all sell more to each other. For example, the United States could lower tariffs on stuff brought in from Brazil in return for Brazil's making it easier for Brazilians to buy more American goods.

Longer Term Asked

THIS was and is the reciprocal trade agreements program. In the past 14 years 41 nations have written trade agreements with us which in different ways cut down barriers to our goods in return for lowered tariffs for their goods.

The State Department says that under the last set of trade agreements, written at Geneva in 1947, we froze tariffs on goods worth $1,225,000,000 coming into our markets in return for the same favor from 22 other nations on American goods. We actually cut tariffs on a half billion dollars worth of goods in return for reduced rates on the same amount of American goods.

Those deals are in effect now.

The Administration will ask Congress to change two ways in which the program now works.

It will be asked to approve such a program for three years, the way the United States did it until the last Congress approved the program for a year only. Government trade experts think a year is too short for American businessmen to make intelligent commitments.

Congress also will be asked to go back to the old way of making tariff schedules through a committee from seven Government agencies: State, Army, Navy, Commerce, Treasury and Agriculture Departments and the Tariff Commission.

The last Congress gave the job to the Tariff Commission, with permission to the President to change rates, but only after explaining to Congress.

Object to Loopholes

HERE is the story on the ITO charter: There will be wide objection to it. For example, the United States Chamber of Commerce says it should be rewritten. State Department men say it would be impossible to get the 53 other nations back to another conference. They have already pledged to give up many trade barriers to which we objected.

In general, American businessmen object to the ITO plan because it permits so many nations to put up trade fences for special reasons. It permits a nation finding itself short of foreign exchange to put a temporary limit on what its citizens can buy, for example. Government experts reply that under the charter nations which do this will have to submit to a review by the ITO nations and must consult with other nations whose trade is affected.

Some businessmen object that nations could go into over-extravagant buying of machinery, run themselves short of foreign currencies, and the ITO could do nothing about it.

The State Department replies that to prevent this would mean that the ITO could interfere in domestic policy of nations and that the United States Congress would be the first to object.

An American Device

AND some businessmen say the charter permits a nation to tell its citizens, "You can buy this but you can't buy that," when the nation is low on foreign exchange.

State Department experts reply that the United States is doing just that—in reverse—right now. It rations things we export to make certain that Americans have enough of everything.

In general, Government experts point out that the 23 nations which would be the most powerful members of the ITO are the ones which have already agreed (at Geneva last year) to cut many trade barriers.

Top American negotiators on the ITO charter say they feel it is the best the United States can get now and should be adopted because further changes can be made as the nations now in trouble get back on their feet.

Last Witness of Kittyhawk Flight Wears Fame Lightly

By Clary Thompson

COLLINGTON ISLAND, N. C., Dec. 11.—You might consider this an out-of-the-way place to look for a celebrity, but you can find one easily enough.

When you get to the monument on Kill Devil Hill, you are almost there. Just go on down the hill, cross the bridge to the island, and Johnny Moore lives in the first house on the left.

Johnny is a unique celebrity. None other like him. Nobody knew this for a long time, but Johnny, a weathered and carefree 62, didn't care. He has just gone right on hunting, crabbing, trapping and guiding on this little pine-covered inland island.

Johnny's fame springs from a web of circumstances that has left him the lone surviving witness of the first powered airplane flight—the very last living man who lent a hand to Orville and Wilbur Wright on December 17, 1903, when they put their flimsy craft into the wind and flew the astonishing distance of 120 feet.

That historic incident, of course, occurred back there across the bridge and up on Kill Devil Hill. Johnny was a husky lad of 17 when he chanced by on that memorable day and helped put the Flyer, as the Wrights called it, or the Kittyhawk, as it is popularly known, into position on the wooden rails from which it was launched.

After lending a couple of brawny arms to this event, watching the three other flights made the same day and then seeing the plane crash ignobly among the hummocks, Johnny casually went back to his eel pots and muskrat traps and to oblivion.

Elevated by Death

HIS participation was forgotten until enthusiasts recently began collecting data about the occasion and found Johnny right in the middle of the picture.

Today his fame is out of hand. All the other witnesses to the flight are dead—Will Dough, Adam Etheridge, John T. Daniels, and Orville and Wilbur Wright. Wilbur Wright died last January. The very next day John Daniels died, too—and that left Johnny.

His fame has reached Washington, where the Flyer has been restored to the Smithsonian Institution after 20 years in a London museum. On December 17, the forty-fifth anniversary of the flight, it will be formally accepted and hung in a place of honor. The President, many historians and scientists and a number of other Very Important Persons—including Johnny—have been invited to attend.

Johnny is impressed by this invitation, but he has not fully made up his mind to accept it. He has never bothered to attend any of the annual local celebrations on Kill Devil Hill. His fellow witnesses were always on hand, anyway, and though Johnny was invited, he always seemed to be over on the mainland, up to Norfolk or down on the beach.

But now that the plane is back, and there is no one else who can fill the "witness" role, 1948 has become a sort of special year for Johnny. But if he does go to Washington, it won't be to see the plane. "I seen it onct," he says.

Just Happened By

FORTY-FIVE YEARS is a long time to remember a thing that didn't make too big an impression, and Johnny is not too certain how he happened to be at Kill Devil dune that morning. He might have been going home from beach fishing, or tending a muskrat line—and Orville and Wilbur Wright asked him to help.

He took hold of the contraption, along with the Wrights, Will Dough, Etheridge and Daniels. The six of them set the Flyer into the grooves of a sort of rail track made from 2x4 scantlings. There followed a considerable discussion between the Wright boys, apparently over who would fly the thing. (Some say the brothers tossed a coin, but Johnny doesn't remember that.)

At last, the motor was started and Orville crawled onto the thing. Its roar grew more violent then, picking up speed, it soared incredibly into the air for a few seconds.

Johnny assisted with all four flights that day, but they didn't make much of an impression. The Wrights had been practicing with their gliders for some time, and the addition of the noisy motor did not appear of any great significance. Anyway, after the

JOHNNY MOORE
. . . He's already seen the plane plane was wrecked in a gust of wind, Johnny went on about his business, whatever it was.

Fame Beats a Path

IF FAME has come late, none cares less than he. The intervening 45 years have been pleasant ones. The father of 14 children, his stock joke, when asked how many he has, is to reply: "Can't tell you; ain't burnt off the bresh yet this year."

By fishing, crabbing, clamming and hunting, Johnny has sustained his large family, his sunny disposition and his garrulous tongue.

Lately, his financial status has been better. Folks from the beach hotels have been seeking him out as a fishing guide. Johnny charges from $7 to $10 a day, and so fruitful are the waters and so cunning is Johnny's fishing that he often helps a morning party get its limit, and then takes on another party at a full day's rate for the afternoon.

Johnny's new fame has been a minor factor in his popularity as a guide. It is not unusual for sportsmen to drive up to his house and ask if he is the fellow who saw the first flight. Then Johnny gets up off the steps and reaches for his hat.

"Yep, that's me," he replies. "Wanta go fishing?"

Great Drought Parches Queensland

By Richard S. Marriott
Associated Press Staff Writer

BRISBANE, Dec. 11.—A great drought is scorching some of Australia's richest grazing country. It has caused the biggest mass migration of sheep and cattle in this dominion's history. At least 2,000,000 sheep and 500,000 cattle have been moved to places where they can find grass to eat and water to drink.

The parched country is nearly half of Queensland State's 670,000 square miles. In a triangular area as large as Texas, the cattle and sheep population has been reduced about nine-tenths.

The drought area stretches from Longreach in the central west to Winton and beyond in the north, and to within 100 miles of the Pacific at Rockhampton.

In this area, sheep men are driving up to 100 miles each week to buy their meat supplies from town butchers. They don't have any sheep left on their properties to kill. The butchers are carting their meat hundreds of miles from the lush coastal fringe.

Even the birds have deserted this dry country.

Years on End

NO USEFUL rain has fallen in the area for two years, but the present situation is the culmination of a series of poor seasons before 1947.

Even artesian wells are cutting out. This is because there has not been sufficient rain to replenish the natural water reservoir that has been tapped in many parts of western Queensland.

Gaunt cattle in the drought country near Ravenswood, north Queensland, search wearily for food and find only dead leaves and tree bark

Sheep and cattle losses, however, are not as great as in previous droughts of less severity. High prices for Australia's chief exports—wool and meat—have enabled graziers (ranchers) to sell their entire flocks and herds to dealers. The dealers have then moved them 1000 miles and more to the southwest of Queensland, or to northern New South Wales.

There has been good rain in those areas, and feed and water are plentiful.

No attempt has yet been made to assess full losses, but it is known that many thousand sheep and cattle have died from hunger or thirst.

Monsoon rains are due in February, but the sheep and cattle men of west Australia realize that banking on rains is a precarious gamble.

By February the beasts that remain in the area will be so weakened that further losses will be heavy even if there is good rain on the black soil plains.

Heavy rain will start the grass growing, but it will turn the dust into a bog. Weak sheep and cattle will perish in this heavy going.

But the westerners are not giving up. They have had droughts before, and they have faith in the recuperative qualities of west Australia. For 60 years and more it has been the finest wool and beef land in Australia.

Main Job Is Books, but Library Needs a Solomon to Answer Questions

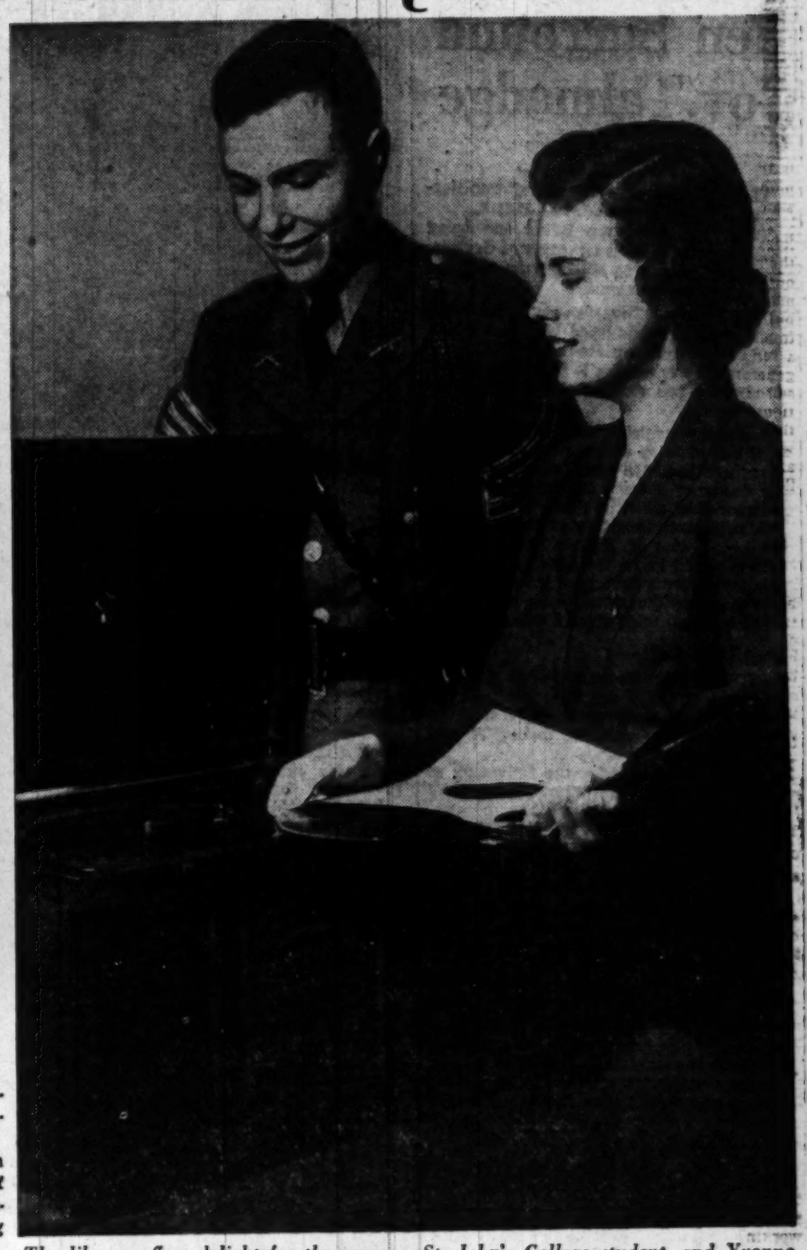
By Tom Kelley—The Washington Post



The library offers delight for the ear as well as the eye, for there are records and phonographs in the music room. Here Jack Crown of 4918 Westway dr. nw., a St. John's College student, and Yvonne Sturtevant of 3515 Hertford pl. nw., an assistant in the music division, work their way through a new album

RICH MAN, poor man, beggar man, thief; doctor, lawyer, merchant, chief . . . these and a lot more wander daily into the 15 branches of the District Public Library.

A library card is theirs for the asking. The only requirement is that they live, work or pay taxes in the District.

To housewives and Harvard Ph. D.'s alike, that card is a passport to the library's 750,000 volumes, plus countless magazines, newspapers and reproductions of works of art.

The District Public Library, established 50 years ago next month as a supplement to the public educational system, first set up shop in a small building at 1326 New York ave. nw.

Fifty years later, sprawled over 14 buildings, plus its central branch at 8th and K sts. nw., the library today has a yearly circulation of 2,718,067 books. As of last July, it counted 165,074 active readers on its rolls.

Alcoholic Self-Help

ALL SORTS of people, with every sort of problem, interest and request, call on the library for help.

Take the troubled neighbor who wandered into the Central Branch's Sociology Division, deeply worried about the little girl next door.

The youngster, under a grandmother's care since her mother went to a mental institution, had begun lying and stealing. The neighbor wanted books to help the grandmother, too appalled at this "disgrace" to ask authorities for help, to understand the child's behavior.

Or the 35-year-old woman with liquor on her breath, who admitted frankly she was an alcoholic and asked for books to help her understand herself and her disease.

Touchy problems like these, several of which confront the Sociology Division weekly, according to its chief, Mrs. Della P. Oakes, are usually turned over to a United Community Service agency equipped to give proper help.

Perplexed parents, struggling to understand their offspring, and engaged couples who want advice on marriage, are among the Sociology Division's heaviest users.

On the lighter side, the library handles such questions as "Which King James wrote the Bible?," a query reported by its information desk.

2 Classification Systems

FIRST PORT of call for many library users, the information desk also handles phone requests for books, and does its best to explain the library's complicated classification system to puzzled users.

Both the Cutter Expansive Classification System, with which most books are marked, and the Dewey Decimal Classification System, are presently in use by the library, during a gradual changeover from the Cutter to the more flexible Dewey system.

The General Reference Division, which answered 9768 questions last year, has coped with queries varying from how the International Monetary Fund works to, "What is the age at which a hippopotamus attains adulthood?"

Its maps, atlases, dictionaries and encyclopedias, plus newspaper and periodical files that date back to 1800, get heavy use from Federal agencies. Other frequent users are national associations, newspapers, magazines and schools.

One of its most patience-taxing tasks, according to Mrs. Helen R. Thompson, who heads the Reference Division, was handling the "violent eruption" of contests which reached a climax last year. The "Miss Hush" competition, with its wide range of clews, kept the section jumping.

A 74-Year Law File

THE WASHINGTONIANA Division is a concentrated reference collection of maps, photographs, clippings and books about the city's history.

A boon to students, historians and newspapers, the division, in charge of Miss Ethel A. Lacey, has a systematic clipping collection that goes back to 1903. It boasts a collection of congressional laws affecting the District that dates back to 1874, with a few gaps.

Among its wealth of information on all conceivable local topics is a slim black volume, a facsimile of the first Congressional Directory. Published in 1789, it needed only seven pages in which to list the members of the National Legislature.

Miss Lacey, with the help of her many sources, can answer questions on the city's slums, or its fanciest homes, can tell an inquirer the name of the first man ever executed in the District, or give him a thumbnail sketch of manners and customs here in 1829.

The Washingtoniana Division also turns out a monthly guide, Informal Education in Washington. This bulletin, a roundup of courses, plays, exhibits, lectures, forums and musical programs available in the District, is free at the library, or costs 15 cents for a year's mailed subscription.

Biggest users by far of the Arts Division are Washington's school teachers, eager for pictures to rouse their pupils' interest in "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner," or the customs of the Eskimos.

Plenty of artists and art students file in and out of the division, too, and amateur home planners and interior decorators frequently ask the help of Firman Wilson, division head.

Then there was the woman artist who wandered in one day to beg for a picture of a bluebonnet. Seems a friend from Texas, exiled here, thought a picture of a field of the Texas flowers would assuage her lonesome heart, and the artist was looking desperately for a model.

Store window display men, book illustrators and people who want a picture to put over the mantel, all take advantage of the Arts Division's circulating collection of 150,000 mounted prints, plus twice as many unmounted ones.

The division also has plenty of texts on art techniques and the lives of artists.

An Hour or Nothing

AT LEAST 3000 persons stopped in at the Central Library's music division last year, to use the library's 3000-record collection. Listeners must sign up in advance for an hour's listening time at one of the two phonographs. Miss Grace Manship, head of the music division, points out that subtle music-appreciation courses are often given gratis to the listener.

The division's circulating sheet music scores, as well as its volumes on musicians and harmony and techniques, are used for the most part by amateur musicians.

Though the records can't be taken out by individuals, the library will lend them overnight to civic groups. The National Park Service, for example, borrowed Christmas carols last year to play on the White House lawn, and all last summer it used library records to introduce its campfire programs in Rock Creek Park.

The Children's Department provides eager youngsters, from picture-book age to ninth grade, with books on anything from cowboys and Indians to junior "love stories." Animal stories are "a universal interest" these days, according to Miss Maxine LaBounty, head of the department, and fairy stories never go out of style.

About 8000 youngsters sat engrossed through 441 story hours held in all library branches last year.

Miniature Libraries

THROUGH its school division, the Children's Department last year sent out book baskets—large laundry-like containers—to teachers in 185 public, private and parochial schools.

Working directly with individual teachers, the division fills the baskets on tips given by teachers on individual class interests and reading ability, then ships them to the schoolroom for eight-week periods. About 4000 book baskets went out last year, each to act as a miniature classroom library.

Its files full of grateful letters from youngsters whose only contact with books is the school basket, the division sometimes gets a jolt in the form of a letter like the following:

"Thank you very much for the books. Next time please send paper dolls."

Youngsters in Gallinger's crippled children's ward or cardiac section form a small but profoundly grateful part of the library's clientele.

Take the little polio victim, with a poor school record and the history of a broken home behind her. With the help of Miss Mildred A. Page, visiting librarian, the youngster progressed from picture books and fairy tales to her normal sixth and seventh grade reading level, over a period of several years. After she left the hospital, the girl returned to the library to ask for a list of classics to read at home, and later was graduated from junior high school with honors.

The Hospital and Extension Service for children, under Miss Page, makes once-a-week visits, complete with story hours, to Glenn Dale Sanitarium and the Christ Child Convalescent Farm.

Help for Housewives

TAKING care of older teen-agers, who want help on how to be popular and how to look beautiful, as well as on their school work, is Miss Lillian Lawyer of the young adult division.

The science and technology division, under John Lord, gets calls for help from science students, home owners and housewives. Spurred by the high cost of living, many of the last group want to know how to finish and upholster furniture themselves, and frequently seek advice on buying home equipment.

Vocational guidance is available through Philip J. Stone, in charge of the library's work interests room. Though the room itself will be abolished in a reorganization move scheduled for next month, the same counseling service will still be available through the business and economics division, also under Mr. Stone.

For a reader with a penchant for foreign affairs, the world affairs room, under Miss M. Clare Ruppert, boasts a collection especially strong in United States foreign relations and the Far East. Though it serves chiefly the college or graduate student, a handful of general readers often drift in to inspect its wares. It has the only circulating collection of United Nations documents in the city.

A new library activity started just three years ago is the group reading program, which brings batches of a dozen or so citizens together weekly to hash over the meaning of classics they always meant to read. The 12 library-sponsored groups, meeting at branches throughout the city, have a total weekly attendance of about 185, and are attended by housewives, businessmen, scientists, newspapermen, a policeman and a streetcar conductor.

Using the Great Books list issued through Chicago's Great Books Foundation, most of the groups modify the regimen, adding contemporary material occasionally, according to John Cheney, director of the program.

The District's Public Library stands as a constant invitation to learning, inexpensive as it is valuable.

There are Jokers In the Fine Type, Mr. D. C. Borrower

By Clarke Beach
Associated Press Staff Writer

SIMPLE folks who sign blank contracts—or don't read contracts even when they are filled in—are helping the loan shark pull a weird variety of tricks.

The unwary borrower often finds that the lender, in one way or another, has extracted from him one third again as much as the money lent for a year. Sometimes he loses both his money and his automobile, refrigerator or television set.

With more and more such goods coming on the market, this sort of cheating is rampant in cities all over the country, according to the National Association of Better Business Bureaus and the American Automobile Association. The Justice Department has received many complaints and is studying the situation.

These organizations are careful to point out that most lenders deal honestly and make only reasonable charges. But the sharpers don't seem to know what the word conscience means.

A $98 'Balloon'

C. T. NOTTINGHAM, superintendent of licenses for the District of Columbia, pulls this case from his fat file of complaints:

An old man of about 75 borrowed $100 to pay his wife's hospital bill. He paid the debt at the rate of $10 a month for 12 months—the extra $20 being the finance charge. But when he went to make his final payment, the sharper told him he still owed $98.

"That's the balloon payment," the lender explained. "We knew you couldn't afford to pay more than $10 a month, so we fixed it so you could put off paying the balance until your last payment."

The extra $98 was the premium on term life, accident and health insurance. The old man had unwittingly authorized it when he signed a blank contract.

Ordinarily, poor clients can't produce the cash for a balloon payment, so they have to get a new loan. Thus the sharper can keep a customer on the hook for years. In this case, Nottingham notified the lender that he wanted the account settled promptly, with no balloon payment. The sharper complied.

The loan sharks don't want trouble. If the authorities threaten action, they make prompt settlements. They have smart lawyers, and they believe they work within the law. But they don't want to take chances.

30 Cases 'Settled'

CLARK KING, Assistant Corporation Counsel in charge of the criminal division, says that in the past year he has been prepared 30 times to prosecute loan companies for making excessive charges. In every case the companies settled. King thus lost his complaining witnesses and had to drop the cases.

The high finance charge isn't the chief racket in Washington as it is in many other localities.

Now the Washington loan shark specializes in loading his clients with every conceivable type of insurance. The borrower signs a blank authorization for insurance, and the sharper fills in the blanks to suit himself. Nottingham says the sharpers, who are licensed insurance brokers, keep as their cut as much as 45 per cent of the premiums.

Falls Church Will Sue for Schools

By Donald Olesen
Post Reporter

SOME TIME next year, roughly $1,500,000 worth of Falls Church (Va.) public schools is going to fall into somebody's lap.

The recipient will either be Fairfax County, which now operates the four schools, or the new City of Falls Church, which once controlled its schools and wants them back.

The question will be put to Fairfax Circuit Court in a test suit which Falls Church plans to file this week. The suit will ask for a declaratory judgment giving the city control of all schools within its limits.

At stake are the Madison, Jefferson and Oak Street elementary schools and the Falls Church High School. They cost about $774,000. Some officials estimate their present value at nearly double that.

Also involved in the suit is the future school policy in Falls Church—and the education of 2100 students.

Blame Is Parried

WHAT TOUCHED off these three-R pyrotechnics? Fairfax County partisans are likely to blame Falls Church, which on August 16 shed its town status and became a second-class Virginia city. Falls Church thus ceased to be a part of adjoining Fairfax County, and it moved to take its Fairfax-operated schools along.

But Falls Church people go back six years for their answer.

During 1941-42, the Falls Church school system often seemed like the little silver ball in a carnival shell game—you never quite knew which government the system was under.

In 1941, Falls Church was operating its own schools. Fairfax paid the tuition of county children who lived on the fringes of town and attended its public schools.

Then, for about a year, Fairfax pulled most of the "fringe" students out of the town's Madison Elementary School, sent them to the new Dunn Loring Elementary School. That left empty desks at Madison School, and posed a headache for the town.

In the fall of 1941, the Fairfax School Board and the Falls Church Town Council reached an agreement—the fringe students would return to Madison School. But Fairfax no longer would pay Falls Church their tuition.

Pushed Through Assembly

NEXT MOVE was made by the Falls Church P-TA, which asked that the county take over and operate the town schools.

Harold E. Erwin of 543 Great Falls st., a town resident who led a last-ditch fight against the P-TA proposal, said four out of the five P-TA officers and a majority of its members lived outside the town limits.

Shortly afterward the Town Council gave in and agreed to deed the school property to the county—a move requiring State legislation. A group of citizens, headed by Erwin and John F. Bethune, former mayor and town attorney, circulated a 700-signature petition opposing the move.

Despite this opposition, however, State Delegate Robert McCandlish sponsored the school-switch bill in the Virginia General Assembly in 1942, and the measure passed. The McCandlish Act stripped the Falls Church School Board of all but one effective function—to name one member to the Fairfax School Board.

It deeded to the county all Falls Church school property, and made Fairfax liable for all bonded indebtedness. Further, the act said, if Falls Church ever became a city, its schools should continue to operate under the Fairfax system.

The Fairfax Board of Supervisors was given authority to set the school tax rate in Falls Church. The tax was to be the same as that levied in the Falls Church Magisterial District of Fairfax.

Taxing Right Challenged

THESE PROVISIONS of the McCandlish Act now are under fire in the impending suit either as "unconstitutional" or "administratively impossible."

As Falls Church City Attorney LaRue van Meter outlined his case, the major contentions will be:

(1) The McCandlish Act violates Section 6 of the Virginia Constitution, which provides that no citizen shall be taxed without his consent or that of his legally elected representatives.

There was no violation as long as Falls Church remained a town, Van Meter believes. As a part of Falls Church Magisterial District, it had its elected representative on the Board of Supervisors.

But as a city, Falls Church has no representative on the board, the attorney says. And the board is specifically granted authority in the McCandlish Act to set the Falls Church school tax rate.

(2) The act "appears to be administratively impossible" under general school provisions of Chapter 35 of the Virginia Code.

That chapter, according to Van Meter, specifies that Virginia State school funds due to cities shall be paid to the city treasurer, "who is powerless to pay out these funds without authorization of a city school board." But, Van Meter contends, the McCandlish Act stripped the Falls Church School Board of the power to allocate funds.

Bond Issue Stymied

WHILE questions such as these are being decided by Fairfax Circuit Court, two things are likely to happen.

First, the contest probably will scuttle immediate plans for a $7,500,000 Fairfax school bond issue. Secondly, it seems bound to tie the 1949-50 Fairfax school budget into knots until the place of Falls Church in the school system is determined.

The whopping school bond issue was proposed by the Fairfax School Emergency Committee. It based the $7,500,000 figure on the school board's estimate of immediate school building needs.

Bond issue backers say they cannot petition for a Fairfax bond election while Falls Church's participation in the move is in legal doubt. Falls Church, they point out, has a stake in the bond issue since its schools are under Fairfax. But can city residents legally vote in the election when they are part of a separate municipality?

At a recent meeting of civic groups covering the "fringe" area of Falls Church, several speakers blamed the city for delaying the school board proposal. One theory being circulated among fringe civic groups goes something like this: Falls Church is trying to block the $7,500,000 school bond issue because, should the city try to annex the fringe area, new schools built there with bond funds "would raise the cost of annexation."

But Mrs. G. A. Justusson, chairman of the bond issue committee of the school emergency group, doubted that such a deep-seated plan exists. She said the school suit blockade of the bond issue was "just coincidental."

Falls Church Mayor Albert M. Orme said the coincidence was "unfortunate," but he believed the suit was necessary to clear the legal air before the bond issue is voted on.

TAKEN by itself, the city's bid to operate its own schools is the center of a brisk fight.

City Attorney Van Meter and Falls Church School Board Chairman Mrs. Mark Regan see these advantages to the switch:

(1) Operation of the city schools, in the long run, would cost less under Falls Church administration.

(2) The city would have control of school policy that it lacks now.

Van Meter estimates that only 1 out of every 17 children educated in Fairfax public schools lives in Falls Church. But he says that Falls Church pays roughly one tenth of the county's school taxes.

Van Meter, Mrs. Regan, and other proponents of the school transfer feel it would lead to "more progressive school administration." The Fairfax School Board, they point out, is appointed by a special group of "school electoral trustees," not directly elected. A city school board would be directly elected.

But opponents of the Falls Church move are just as convinced the switch won't work. Harold A. Ward, past president of the Fairfax Federation of Citizens Associations, thinks the result would be "an administrative nightmare." There are no Negro schools, Ward points out, in the Falls Church limits. Therefore, he says, Negro students living in the city would still have to attend Fairfax schools.

Administration would be further complicated by the fact that more than two thirds of students now attending city schools do not live in Falls Church, Ward believes.

In both cases, complicated tuition payments between the city and county would be necessary.

Only 677 City Residents

FIGURES COMPILED recently by the City School Board bear out the three-to-one ratio between students from the county and from Falls Church.

Total enrollment in Falls Church schools, according to Mrs. Regan, is 2103. Of that number, only 677 live within the city limits.

In Madison Elementary School, with which Jefferson is combined, the ratio is 771 to 270; in Oak Street Elementary, 534 to 221, and in the Falls Church High School, 798 to 186.

Fairfax School Superintendent W. T. Woodson last week listed what the city would have to pay for the schools—as a minimum—if it won its suit. It undoubtedly would have to assume the bonded indebtedness of $575,000 on the schools.

Falls Church's school plant cost about $774,000 to build, Woodson said. This includes $120,000 for the original building and alterations at the 17-room Madison Elementary School, $40,000 for the old Jefferson Elementary, $232,650 for the high school (of which $151,000 was granted by the Federal Government), $361,400 for the new Oak Street Elementary School, and about $20,000 for eight temporary elementary classrooms.

The Fairfax superintendent said he personally felt that the present county operation of the Falls Church schools was "more economical" administratively. He said the "trend in Virginia now is toward consolidation," to eliminate double administration of school systems lying close together geographically.

School Is Called Vital Part of Israel Backbone

By Fred M. Hechinger

TEL AVIV (Delayed).—The pioneer settlements were the seeds from which America has grown. The Kibbutz (settlement) similarly is the beginning and the core of the State of Israel. It is the communal cooperative which has wrested fertile farmland from desert sand and rock.

The settlers have dedicated their lives to hard work and service to their country. They have started out under circumstances which made spartan living inevitable; but they found new values in the toughness of their existence. As a result they have produced a new generation of men and women—self-reliant, quiet and deeply rational. Their mental as well as their physical strength comes from wholehearted return to the soil and their leisurely interest in civilization.

If the kibbutz is the backbone of Israel, the school within the Kibbutz is the backbone of each setilement.

The bridge and the gate of Maabaroth, a kibbutz of some 90 families, was guarded by a strong boy of about 14 with a stengun. War has come to the peaceful pioneers; but for the young the war remains only a part-time duty; their schooling continues unimpaired.

Old Problem Solved

HERE at the kibbutz the age-old, international problem of the rural school has been solved. The 200 children of Maabaroth receive expert care and education as their equal birthright.

The newborn baby is placed in a spotless ward where trained nurses, themselves daughters of the kibbutz, help mothers.

When the children are old enough to leave the "ward," they go to the children's center. There they live in small individual houses, each with bedrooms, dining rooms, play yards and spacious gardens. The little ones continue to be looked after by trained nurses. When they grow older—about 3 years—they join the kindergarten.

Until 5 every day children's town is a self-contained community; but then—at the end of the working day—the parents take over. They call for their youngsters, take them to their small, but functionally modern little houses, and later, after a meal "at home," return them to their rooms in children's town.

From the age of 6 until 18 all kibbutz children go to school. In some instances the last few years are mixed with work in the field, but the formal learning of the classroom is not permitted to suffer.

Teacher Training

MOST of the teachers come from the kibbutz, but they must complete three years of special training at a teacher seminar in Tel Aviv.

The settlement schools, beginning with the first year of elementary work, follow the "project method." Instead of teaching isolated subjects, they pick out a particular area, period or field of interest, and then proceed to connect all phases of learning. If the Middle Ages happen to be on the agenda, the youngsters study the mathematics, the history, the literature, the arts and the sciences of that particularly period.

I told my guide that this method had been introduced as "revolutionary" in a number of colleges in the United States during the past three years. The "country teacher" smiled. "It has been generally accepted here for about 16 years," he said.

In these rural schools special emphasis is placed on the humanities. Since education here is "terminal" for the vast majority, every attempt is made to provide the young pioneers with all the tools of civilized and cultured living.

Generally there are no formal examinations. At the end of a particular phase the teachers call a "collective performance." All interested members of the community are invited in, and the youngsters are called upon to demonstrate their knowledge orally and in public. Since the kibbutz consists only of friends and neighbors and the children are taught from the cradle up that one can respect others without fearing them, this procedure never poses a problem of inhibitions.

Continued Education

AT THE end of formal instruction at 18 all the young men and women are organized in small groups which meet for continued part-time education for another two years.

For about an hour every day these young kibbutzites discuss current events and social problems. Even at this time of battle the teachers of the kibbutz are trying to impress upon young minds that cruelty and brutality and blind force are wrong and unjustifiable.

At the same time settlement schools find it necessary to "discourage" overenthusiastic enlistment in the armed forces. Without such guidance every 17-year-old would leave the farm for the barracks—preferably for the glamour of the air force. In orientation lectures these young men and women are shown that the settlements themselves are in the frontlines and that their defense, though less romantic, is as vital.

Occasionally a compromise has to be made in these days of Israel's fight for survival. Complete groups of young people from a comparatively safe kibbutz are sent to one of the devastated frontline settlements for their defense and reconstruction.

Integration of Old

A PROBLEM here is the integration of old families of refugees. Here again education is offered as the key. Beginning with several months of full-time compulsory schooling, regardless of age, a combination of work and learning continues until the newcomers master the language and the customs of the country. Illiteracy is not tolerated in the kibbutz.

Except for a minority of religious settlements, religion is not taught in the schools of the Israeli settlers. The Bible is read and studied as national history and literature rather than as a religious document. While Saturday is the official day of rest in Israeli, the settlers are not in any way held to pious observance of the Sabbath.

The settlers have given up much of the outward tinsel of "civilization." Quite ostentatiously, the women refuse to use cosmetics and lipstick, for instance. But in well-stocked libraries is the knowledge of many cultures, and we were self-consciously quiet when one of the pioneers discussed the Crusades and the life of Napoleon.

It is difficult to think in terms of rural schools in which two foreign languages—English and Arabic—are compulsory. (Hebrew is, of course, the official language.)

It would be even more difficult to find a local tractor driver in a farm community anywhere who is personally informed concerning the details of the basic curriculum. Our guide at Maabaroth was, and he added: "But we insist that we retain the independence of selecting our method of teaching. And in the end, the best education is the example of the community."

Before I left, the settler apologized for his imperfect English. "You see, I taught myself with books and without teachers," he said. "That's why it is easier for me to understand Shakespeare than to understand you."

Boyer Scores A Triumph In New York

By George Tucker

NEW YORK, Dec. 11 (AP).—Without any previous experience on Broadway, Charles Boyer, the motion picture actor, came to New York this week in the French play "Red Gloves" and scored a tremendous personal triumph.

With the possible exception of Jose Ferrer in "The Silver Whistle," you have to go all the way back to John Barrymore's "Hamlet" to find a more lyrical and unanimously enthusiastic welcome than was given the amiable Frenchman.

"Welcome to Broadway, Charles Boyer. "You're great!" wrote Robert Garland in the Journal-American.

"Anytime Mr. Boyer wants to set up shop on Broadway, this department will offer very little sales resistance," said Brooks Atkinson in the New York Times.

"Boyer brings vigor and magnetism to the chief part. His duel of wits with a would-be killer before he takes his gun is a triumphant job of portraiture," chimed in Howed Barnes of the New York Herald Tribune. All others were in similar vein.

TENNESSEE WILLIAMS' "Streetcar Named Desire" is said to have grossed exactly $1,438,271 in its first year on Broadway, which ended this week (the year, not the play). Its representatives contend "Streetcar" is the only serious play in a quarter of a century that has played to standees at every performance.

Unless plans for "Mr. Godiva," a play based on the book "Lady Godiva and Mr. Tom," materialize, Claire Luce probably will return to England and accept an offer to star in "The Imperial Concubine," a drama that concerns the empress of China.

Lee Tracy's first job in New York since 1940 will be "The Traitor"—no opening date set . . . . Mae West is taking her revival of "Diamond Lil" to Pittsburgh and then across the country to the Pacific before bringing it to New York.

After a long absence, Sean O'Casey is to be represented again on Broadway, this time with "Cockadoodle Dandy," an Irish fantasy in which a rooster wanders on and off the stage throughout the evening.

The revue "Make Mine Manhattan" pulls out of New York January 1, after a 50-week run. First stop Boston, with Bert Lahr in the role made famous by Sid Caesar, who is withdrawing.

Now that "As the Girls Go" is a hit, Howard Bay, who performed the double task of director and scenic designer for the production, has decided to transfer his base of operations from the coast to New York. For the last two years he has been tied up with Universal Pictures, but the contract recently was cancelled by mutual agreement so that he could do the settings for the gaudy, but not too successful, "Magdalena."

Union Needs Studied

Schenectady, N. Y., Dec. 11 —A special 13-man planning committee selected from the faculty, administration, student body and alumni of Union College has been created to study long-range needs of the college and to bring to the board of trustees recommendations for future development.

Ocean Apart, Teachers Trade Classes

Mrs. Winifred Rose MacVicar of London lectures before her class in the Manitowoc Washington Junior High School. She is one of 112 British teachers here under an exchange arrangement

Agnes Dunne of Manitowoc, Wis., pauses to see how two of her pupils progress in the Laxson Street Secondary Girls School in London, where she "exchanged classrooms" with a British teacher

MANITOWOC, Wis., Dec. 11 (AP).—Between the spacious school building and the prospect of winter sports, Mrs. Winifred Rose MacVicar thinks America—particularly Wisconsin—is a very fine place to live and work in.

Mrs. MacVicar is an exchange teacher who swapped jobs for a year with Miss Agnes Dunne. Mrs. MacVicar is teaching ninth grade English in Manitowoc's Washington junior high school.

The most startling difference between British and American school systems is the buildings.

"Here you have a building the like of which I don't think I've ever seen in England," Mrs. MacVicar said. "These big, well-lighted classrooms, the wide, open corridors, the gymnasiums with all those seating accommodations and the auditorium such as we in England only dream of—all are part of a modern building planned for education."

She compared them with schools in bomb-damaged, crowded districts of the British capital, with little playground space and no grass.

Little Formality

ALTHOUGH Mrs. MacVicar is firmly convinced that the job of teaching children is basically the same the world over, she still is a little amazed at the lack of formality with which her students approach her.

"When an English student walks past me, he will say, 'Good morning, Madam'," she explained. "When I pass one of my Manitowoc students outside the classroom, he yells, 'Hiyah, Mrs. MacVicar'."

She added that she's having plenty of trouble learning which "forms of speech" are acceptable here.

"Certain things offend my ear—not actually grammatical mistakes, but what to me is careless speech," she said. "But, then we also have that in London."

However, she's catching on fast and—as her assistant principal declared—"The kids are crazy about her."

The British teacher thinks Manitowoc likes education better than London does.

"There's greater enthusiasm. Parents seem more interested and the youngsters seem to like school more."

She qualified her statement:

"But Manitowoc is an entirely different community from my school's section in London. Circumstances are so different in a crowded city. If those British children had the facilities you have here probably they and their parents would be more interested in school, too."

One of 112 Here

THE blonde, smiling Englishwoman is one of 112 British teachers who arrived in the United States late in August, under an arrangement made by the United States Office of Education.

After several months introducing her young, slangy charges to the perils of the dangling participle and the stimulating charms of the English language, Mrs. MacVicar obviously likes her temporary job.

She finds that the organization of the individual schools is more free in London than in Manitowoc, however. In the British capital, each school is permitted to develop its own curriculum and control its own activities—"like your Federal Government, with each State making rules for itself."

"Here all schools are organized along similar lines with the same curriculum, books and methods.

"In London each school decides these things for itself. There is more freedom of choice for the teachers—more things left to the teachers' judgment. We don't have to produce education according to a specific pattern."

Main Difference

THE BIG difference between the systems, she added, is that in America "every child has about the same education as every other child throughout his whole school life."

In England, children of 11 years are divided into three groups: Those who may go on to college; those with particular talents for technical work, and the rest, who attend modern secondary schools. The classification is based on inclination and ability, parents' wishes and teachers' judgment of pupils, and they attend different types of schools.

Mrs. MacVicar has been studying about the United States since she learned she was to be an exchange teacher—and now uses every chance to learn more about it. One of the first things she heard about Wisconsin was the winter sports.

She arrived carrying a pair of skis—and she certainly intends to use them.

By Richard Tompkins

LONDON, Dec. 11 (AP).—As an American school teacher working a year in England, Agnes Dunne has found her toughest task is teaching the stiffly formal British youngsters to come around after class and chew the fat with teacher.

"At first they were astonished when I spoke to them outside of class, in the halls and outside," she said.

She has been fixing that. Now they stick around after hours to pop questions about Indians, cowboys, penthouses, gangsters and other phenomena of American life as portrayed in Hollywood.

Miss Dunne, ninth grade English teacher at Washington Junior High School in Manitowoc, Wis., is one of 112 American teachers now in Britain under an exchange system. This system is arranged by the United States Office of Education and the English Speaking Union, in cooperation with other organizations.

She is teaching for a year at the Laxson street secondary girls school in a working class section of southeast London.

More Informal

"OUR youngsters are more informal than the English children in their classrooms," Miss Dunne said in an interview. "Here there is more of a gulf between the teacher and the pupil.

"A formality of manner is taken for granted. The children are harder to get to know than our children—but they are lovable when you do get to know them."

Some of the questions her pupils are popping at her—now that they know she won't bite—show strong curiosity about the United States. For instance:

"Do the cowboys chase red Indians?" "What are penthouses like?" "What are bobby-soxers?" "Do gangsters try to rob you." Many ask Miss Dunne about Hollywood and the make-up American girls use.

Miss Dunne believes Americans have an "erroneous view" of conditions here. She has found Britons better nourished and better dressed than she had been led to expect.

British school children, she points out, have free milk and hot school lunches, usually with meat, for about 50 cents a week.

Well Equipped

MISS DUNNE also found the British schools better equipped than she had expected. She brought over dozens of pencils, erasers, crayons and rulers. Another teacher, she said, brought a trunkful of classroom equipment, only to find there were plentiful supplies in the British schools.

"Of course, we're all pleased to see conditions so much better than we had thought they would be," she said.

"The morale of the children is very good. They are light-hearted, happy and hopeful. I believe they were too young before the war to realize what conditions were then and they are satisfied with what they have now."

There are 37 girls in Miss Dunne's class, corresponding to a group in an American junior high school. They range in age from 12 to 15.

Religious Study

ALTHOUGH Miss Dunne teaches only English at home in Wisconsin, she was called on here to give instruction also in geography, English history, dramatics and religion.

She says she "thinks highly" of the morning religious exercises in the schools which are conducted from a nondenominational point of view.

Before arriving in London Miss Dunne spent the month of August in Ireland and Wales. She expects to spend her Christmas holidays in Italy, her Easter holidays in France and plans to visit other continental countries next summer before returning to Manitowoc for the fall term.

Seven Reasons Why Men Fail

By Loyd Brady

CHICAGO, Dec. 11 (AP).—Why does the college trained man frequently fail at his first job?

The answer—he is still a child in one way or another, because he lacks one or more of seven basic traits.

That is the answer given by Dr. Robert N. McMurry based on a survey by his management firm which studied 1167 trainees directly hired from college by 247 companies.

He listed the seven traits as:

The ability to stay long enough with a company to repay the investment in training.

The ability to accept responsibility.

Perseverance, or the ability "to follow a path to the end," even if the path is unfamiliar.

Self-reliance.

The quality of being agreeable to different groups and different persons.

Identification of his personal goals with those of the firm.

And the ability to exercise authority without belligerence.

"Absence of these traits, or any one of them, indicates failure of an individual to grow emotionally," said Dr. McMurry.

He said his study was based on experience with the 1167 trainees recruited directly from college who were trained at the expense of $2750 each for the first year, exclusive of such items as supervision and breakage.

Of the whole group, only 58 per cent were judged suitable at the end of the first year. The others had left or had proved unsatisfactory and were discharged.

The way to avoid this loss, Dr. McMurry said, "is to keep clearly in mind the qualifications for the job, and to use a patterned interview which permits the interviewer to explore all facets of the applicant's background.

"This latter will give the interviewer a factual basis for judging whether the trainee does have the qualities the company seeks—and this judgment must be made upon a careful evaluation of what the candidate has done rather than on what he says he will do."

A New College Rises Where World War II Guns Roared

IN a museum city of old Normandy, a new cornerstone is making headlines. It is the one recently laid for the new university of Caen, which will replace the ancient institution demolished in the 1944 battle for the beachhead in France.

Caen was an old settlement, already linked with the life and exploits of William the Conqueror, when the university was founded in 1432, recalls the National Geographic Society. Exactly how old the town was then is still an unsolved question, though it is known that a village existed there as early as the ninth century.

William of Normandy made Caen his home and capital. From it the invasion of England was launched in 1066. There, William and his wife, Matilda, built two magnificent abbeys.

English Founded It

THE ORIGINAL University of Caen was founded by Henry VI of England nearly four centuries later, when the tide of conquest was running counter to the arms of Normandy. At that time the English held much of France, and established their Caen institution as the third oldest English university after Oxford and Cambridge.

From the beginning the fortunes of the university fluctuated with the ebb and flow of international and religious wars, of revolution, of prosperous and hard times. Started with only church-code and civil-law departments, it had added theology, arts, and medicine before 1440, in order to support the English rulers competing with the University of Paris.

It survived when the French took over Caen in 1450, though it was soon reconstituted with the loss of its former royal privileges. Submerged by the French Revolution, the modern university was reestablished in 1894.

Records Lost

THE UNIVERSITY'S eighteenth-century buildings, its furnishings and museum collections, historic Norman manuscripts and books were all destroyed in the bombings and fires that leveled most of Caen in the summer of 1944.

The new structure, it is reported, will rise on a height overlooking the city and the castle founded by William the Conqueror. Among the contributions offered for a new start are book collections from United States libraries, and a donation including fourteenth-century French documents from the Library of the British House of Commons.

Plans for the rebuilding of Normandy's museum city were under consideration almost as soon as the Germans started retreating. Two major landmarks still raised their towers above the battered "City of a Thousand Spires"—William's Abbaye aux Hommes and Matilda's Abbaye aux Dames.

Radcliffe Offering New Scholarships For a Freshman

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 11.—To give students of special ability an opportunity to pursue their particular interest in college, Radcliffe College is offering, as part of a freshman scholarship program, a competitive award of $800 in history for 1949-'50.

The winner will be chosen on the basis of an examination prepared by the Harvard-Radcliffe department of history, to be given in April at the applicant's school.

A second feature of the new program includes seven national scholarships of $600 a year for an incoming student from each of the following areas: New England, Middle Atlantic States, upper South, lower South, Great Lakes area, Middle West and Great Plains and Rocky Mountain States.

Housing Project

Lakeland, Fla., Dec. 11—Florida Southern College announces the completion of its $1,500,000 housing project for students and faculty. The project houses 1000 students in 18 buildings, plus 24 families of faculty members and veterans.

The Magazine Rack

By Katharine Graham

IN HONOR of the seventeenth anniversary of the Washington Merry-Go-Round, or just because the editors felt like it, Drew Pearson adorns the cover of Time and is the subject of a lengthy, amusing and, on the whole, friendly profile in the press section, headed "Querulous Quaker."

Andrew Russell Pearson, says the magazine, is the world's second best-paid newsman ($140,000 under Winchell), grossing about $350,000 a year and keeping a tenth of it. His heavy expenses include a $2000-a-week payroll, and a cut of the take goes to his former partner, Robert S. Allen, still part owner of the column. But he rarely needs to pay his tipsters, Pearson says.

"Pearson does not earn his pay by writing beautiful prose," says Time. "His paragraphs read like jottings on an envelope in a lurching taxicab." But what he says, it adds, "keeps small men honest and forces bigger men to work in an atmosphere of caution that frequently cramps their style."

He has been called every kind of liar (Presidents Roosevelt and Truman and Secretary of State Hull added three categories to the list), yet he was named Father of the Year for 1948 and he is chairman of National Cat Week, Time notes. He has been sued eight times for libel for a total of $23,500,000, but hasn't paid a judgment. Time adds that his attorneys' fees are huge.

At home he has 10 telephones, and uses "thee" and "thy" with his relatives. And the only newspapers he reads, says Time, are The Washington Post and the New York Times.

HIGH GRADE uranium ore has been found in Colorado, according to an important news story broken by Nat S. Finney of the Washington Bureau of Look. Although the mother lode has not yet been completely explored, "expert geologists who found it have reason to believe it is part of a deposit that will yield more than 500 tons of pure uranium oxide," Finney reveals. Until this discovery, we have had to rely on mines in Canada and in the Belgian Congo.

In his highly romantic and interesting story, Finney does not make clear, perhaps for reasons of security, how it happened to be left to two Canadians, Frenchmen by birth, to locate the strategic material in this country. A small amount of uranium came from vanadium mines in Colorado and Utah toward the end of the war, but it was extracted at great expense and with difficulty from carnotite, a secondary uranium ore, he says.

FREDERICK LEWIS ALLEN, author of "Only Yesterday" and editor of Harper's, begins a series in that magazine on "The Great Pierpont Morgan." He recalls the efforts of the Pujo Committee to prove that a small group of American bankers, headed by Morgan, in effect controlled the whole American economy.

What manner of man was this? Allen turns to several contemporaries of Morgan's who had dealings with him on different levels. Lincoln Steffens viewed him with eyes of a critical but obviously very awe-struck reporter. The Rev. W. S. Rainsford, rector of the church attended and more or less run by Morgan, nevertheless dared defy him on the size of the vestry and got away with it.

Sharpest criticism came from Roger Fry, who served under Morgan at the Metropolitan Museum, and who notes "that a crude historical imagination was the only flaw in his otherwise perfect insensibility."

An appraisal of a more current public figure, Gen. Lucius D. Clay, is made by William Harlan Hale, also in Harper's. In areas where relations to subject peoples and neighbor states are highly complex, American political power rests in the hands of two generals (Clay and MacArthur) whose prestige is great but whose previous political training is nil— and who are removed from direct control of American civil authority, Hale charges.

It's not a case of usurpation of power by the military, but of abdication on the part of civilian authorities, Hale thinks. And this is partly due to lack of trained personnel in the State Department.

FOR THOSE of 40 years and over, Greer Williams, in Nation's Business, advices how to prevent that middle-age fatigue. "You're Not as Tired As You Think," he asserts.

Some of his rules: Act your age; learn to conserve your energy; learn to rest as well as to work, and avoid boredom. If you don't like your job and can't change, find outside interests, Williams warns. The middle-ager "should be able to run circles around the young fellow. But not at the bar or the beach."

COLLIER'S and the American, both Crowell-Collier publications, have stories on General Eisenhower.

Relating how the general has taken Columbia by storm, Boyden Sparkes tells in the American how the new president made one youth deliriously happy by approaching him in a crowded corridor with the half-question, "Tackle?" Several days before Coach Lou Little had pointed out some of his best players on the field, and Eisenhower had remembered.

Quentin Reynolds in Collier's points out that the general stems from a family both ordinary and extraordinary. Every one of five brothers possesses the same traits of independence and originality that carried Ike to fame, reports Reynolds. And yet the Eisenhower family is no different from many others all over the country, he adds.

BOOKS

Sweep of American Literature Integrated Into Our History

By Sterling North

LITERARY HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES. Editors: Robert E. Spiller, Willard Thorp, Thomas H. Johnson and Henry Seidel Canby. Three volumes. MacMillan. 2239 pp. $20.

AMERICAN literature now spans more than three history-packed, world-shaking centuries. This covers roughly two thirds of the period since Gutenberg began to print with movable type and virtually the entire era of general literacy in the Western world.

It is not surprising, therefore, to find that an adequate history of American literature demands the services of 55 experts, including 4 editors and 3 associate editors, nor that the product of their industry can scarcely be packed into three heavy volumes totaling more than one million words.

Publication of this new literary history is in itself of literary and historical importance, being the first survey of its kind since "The Cambridge History of American Literature," issued more than a quarter of a century ago.

But the special claim to distinction that can be made for this cyclorama of American literature is that it attempts (usually with success) to integrate American books and authors into the entire background of social and historical forces which have molded the Nation.

Often the background chapters are more exciting than those devoted exclusively to books and authors. This is particularly true of the earlier years, when much of importance was being done and little of importance being written.

It is not equally true of the periods of golden achievement in literature: the "Flowering of New England" a century ago and the current renaissance, both adequately commemorated by the generally discerning editors.

Obstacle of Puritanism

AMERICAN literature was long in coming of age. Puritanism, which in its decline did so much to vitalize New England culture, at first created almost insuperable barricades to any free-questing spirit seeking truth beyond the dogmas of the witch-burners and hell's-fire preachers who infested our seventeenth century.

But I am happy to see that Thomas H. Johnson, in writing on Jonathan Edwards, appreciates that eminent divine's importance as philosopher and essayist quite aside from his magnitude as a proselytizer and preacher. And it is good to discover that Edward Taylor, the only first-rate New England poet previous to the nineteenth century, is gradually being rescued from oblivion.

Justice is also done (in this first of the 10 sections) to the early diarists and chroniclers, the Hartford wits, John Bartram, the Quaker naturalist, and his even more gifted son William, whose lyric tropical descriptions influenced Coleridge in the writing of "Kubla Khan."

European authors had often been inspired by tales of the New World, while American authors were for years slavish in their imitation of English stylists. Throughout the book the ebb and flow of influence across the Atlantic makes for a pattern of alternating isolationism and literary internationalism only recently brought into balance by our own maturing culture.

As Dramatist Royall Tyler naively asked in his prologue to "The Contrast" (1787):

Why should our thoughts to distant countries roam
When each refinement may be found at home?

Particularly when publishers on both sides of the ocean pirated books, British critics and travelers often scorned our barbarism, and the British armed forces first impressed our seamen, then burned our Capital.

Whole Books Condensed

WAR, however, seldom produced our finest literature. Save for a Declaration of Independence, or a Gettysburg Address, the political, the polemic or the propagandistic have seldom reached as high a literary level as the best product of our poets, novelists, essayists and historians.

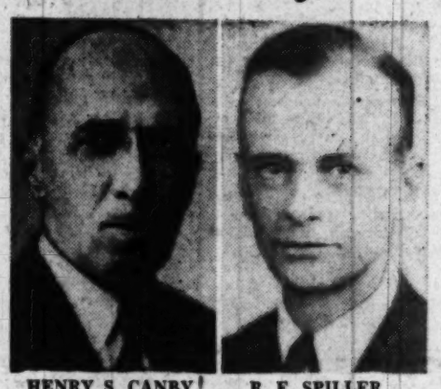
Some of the finest chapters in this book are virtual condensations of whole books on the same subjects by the original critics and authors. Thus Carl Van Doren on Benjamin Franklin, Carl Sandburg on Abraham Lincoln, Henry Seidel Canby on Walt Whitman and particularly H. L. Mencken on "The American Language" draw upon such a wealth of material that their chapters glow with insight.

Lesser known scholars throughout these volumes achieve with industry what they sometimes lack in inspiration.

The path of serious creation has never been easy in America, and only during the last 50 years have writers been decently paid. The age of Irving and Cooper produced the first professional men of letters. Poe wrote magazine criticism for a living. It was always more profitable in those days to pirate British authors than to pay local ones. But by the time Emerson, Hawthorne, Melville, Thoreau and Whitman arrived, American literature had come of age and could more nearly meet the British competition.

The essays on the last five mentioned writers are among the best in the survey (as they should be, dealing as they do with five of America's most indisputably important literary men).

In the sections entitled "Crisis" and "Expansion," leading up to the Civil War, the emphasis is often more political and social than literary, though Eric F. Goldman deals fairly with the great historians Prescott, Parkman and Motley, while Odell Shepherd writes brilliantly of Longfellow, Holmes and Lowell.



HENRY S. CANBY R. E. SPILLER
Two of the editors of the "History"

Fine Job on Twain

SEVERAL of the best chapters in the book were written by Dixon Wecter, who knows the literary culture of the frontier, Mark Twain, and the stresses which brought on the Civil War as few other contributors could know them.

Other writers for this survey are excellent on one subject and fallible on another. For instance, Willard Thorp's piece on Herman Melville is first-rate criticism; his essay on modern poetry merely passable reporting. The same can be said of F. O. Mathiessen, who is luminous on the subject of Poe but clique-bound and often patronizing when discussing Edna Millay and Archibald MacLeish.

Much of this book is good literary journalism or history without being outstanding criticism. Some is scarcely acceptable as any of these. Sculley Bradley writes a curiously irrational and sentimental chapter entitled, "The Emergence of the Modern Drama." And I will never be able to understand why Morton D. Zabel, worshiper at the shrine of Ezra Pound and other mountebanks, was allowed to write the all-important penultimate chapter, "Summary of Criticism."

And there are other flaws. The articles should have been signed, and some brief biography given of the often obscure authors of each piece. It is maddening to have to turn to the book of the second volume to identify each critic. The index is inadequate. Dozens of important contemporary authors are ignored, including one American Nobel Prize winner. Too much importance is given to the dreary proletarian writers of the 1930s.

Does Justice to James

BUT these are really minor impairments in a book of such vast scope. It is more than enough that this history gives the reader the feeling of the continuous flow of American literature from the journals of Chamberlain and the "Principal Navigations" of Hakluyt down to Hemingway and Eugene O'Neill. Incidentally, it contains one of the finest critiques of Henry James to be found in recent critical literature.

One thing can be said for this book. It follows Dr. Canby's high aim to write a survey not solely for the scholar. And it avoids for the most part the extremes of Marxist and Freudian criticism which have polluted our critical thinking for a quarter of a century.

By 1975 it will be possible to write more discerningly of the 1920s, '30s and '40s. But until that time no student of American literature will be led too far astray by the Spiller-Thorp-Johnson-Canby "Literary History of the United States"—an informative and highly readable review of an intensely interesting culture.

Sister Against Sister

Lesson for Cobblers Of Historical Novels

ELIZABETH, CAPTIVE PRINCESS. By Margaret Irwin. Harcourt, Brace. 246 pp. $3.

EVER SINCE the publication of her brilliant "Young Bess," I have been convinced that Margaret Irwin is perhaps the best living historical novelist.

All of her nine books are put together with craftsmanship of an Elizabethan sonnet. The imagery is rich yet restrained. The characterizations have the jewellike quality of good miniature painting. The action is swift, certain and dramatic as though the first draft were written as a play rather than as a novel.

She knows her period so perfectly that she has no need of the usual props of costume romance. Every sentence carries overtones and allusions made doubly effective through the almost lost art of understatement.

If possible, this book on the budding Elizabeth is even better than her earlier novel on the even younger Bess. This is true partly because English history quickened its pace at about this time, giving England three monarchs and at least two rebellions in less than 12 months.

MARGARET IRWIN
. . . Good miniature painter

Clashing Personalities

IT IS probably unnecessary to remind the average literate reader that, following the death of Edward VI, the tragic, scholarly and beautiful Lady Jane Grey reigned for nine days and subsequently lost her head; or that Mary, in ascending the throne suspected young Elizabeth of treason and briefly imprisoned her in the tower.

But unless you have dug fairly deeply into English history, you are probably not aware of all of the reasons why Mary Tudor hated Elizabeth, or how thoroughly the personalities of the two women conflicted to make English history.

Although Henry VIII had proclaimed both these daughters illegitimate, there had been a period when dowdy, unattractive Mary had been forced to carry the train of mischievous, shrewd, red-headed little Elizabeth. And even after Mary was on the throne and Jane and her scheming husband and father-in-law were beheaded, Mary had reason to feel insecure. In fact the Wyatt rebellion was more nearly successful than most people realize.

This novel is the pageant of those troubled, high-spirited times, rich with the poetry of freshly minted English.

But it is much more. It is a consummate portrait of the essentially pagan but outwardly puritan Elizabeth, whose powerful lover had been beheaded for his indiscretions, whose very life was in danger, first from the coterie behind Jane, then from the advisers of Mary. Here is Elizabeth, young, proud, neurotic, playful, wily, learned, handsome, musical, decorous or bawdy as the spirit moved her, a rich complex of often paradoxical traits, but every inch a princess of her era.

Playing With Fire

IN this book we find Elizabeth countering and parrying every move of her enemies, pretending love for Mary, escaping the Court, simulating sickness, carefully avoiding implication in the Wyatt rebellion even when it seemed successful, and finally outwitting the inquisitors sent to implicate her when she was imprisoned in the tower.

But as though life were a game to all these people, Elizabeth could not help taunting her royal and dangerous sister on occasion.

History, of course, tells us that Elizabeth was exonerated and lived to become England's greatest Queen and Spain's greatest enemy. But this does not lessen the suspense as Mary and Philip begin their turbulent reign with the captive princess still in the tower.

This is historical romance as it should be written. I can think of at least a dozen authors of flamboyant, vulgar "historical" novels who should study this little masterpiece page by page and sentence by sentence.

If, in complete despair at such perfection, they should forswear their writing for some livelihood more compatible with their meager talents, that would be literature's immeasurable gain.

—STERLING NORTH.

From Documentary to Degas, In a Nutshell . . .

Documentary Background of World War II, 1931-1941. Columbia University Press. 1112 pp., $10.

BEGINNING with the Manchuria invasion by Japan and concluding with the joint declaration by 26 United Nations for cooperative action against the Axis countries, these documents, compiled and edited by James W. Gantenbein, pertain factually to the first cold war. Mr. Gantenbein has not attempted a complete collection of foreign affairs documents. His purpose was to collate documents which might be useful in tracing the main lines of foreign policy of a number of the involved countries.—J.K.B.

Contemporary American Sculpture, edited by C. Ludwig Brumme, introduction by William Zoraeh. Crown. $5.

PAINTINGS are hard enough to pack and ship, but sculpture presents difficulties which lead most galleries to adopt a hands-off policy toward it. The result is that most of us see 100 paintings to one piece of sculpture. A partial answer to that is this book of 130 plates, displaying, to as good advantage as photographs can, the work of 87 men and women. There are abstractionists or constructionists like Archipenko, Calder and David Smith, socially conscious sculptors like Nat Werner, straight portraitists like Jo Davidson, and others who do not fit so comfortably into group classifications, like Anita Wechsler, Mitzi Solomon, Gaston Lachaise, Henry Rox, Randolph W. Johnston.

A Treasury of Drawings From Pre-History to the Present, edited by Louis Lozowick. Lear-Crown. $3.

DRAWINGS are a special delight to the connoisseur, for they mark the first fresh, unspoiled idea, they have an amazingly extended range of expression, even though they are only black and white, and the smart collector can sometimes pick up a treasure beyond price for a price within reason. For the man who can't afford an original drawing, photographic reproductions are dependable. This book contains 82 plates. The emphasis on moderns is a little heavy, and some may question whether an Egyptian fresco may be classified as a drawing. But it's an interesting and informative selection.

SIXTEEN colored plates picturing the leading dancers of the great period of romantic ballet, 1840-59, supply the principal appeal of this charming little book. Illustrated here is perhaps the most renowned feminine foursome in ballet history: Marie Taglioni and the younger Fanny Elssler, Carlotta Grisi and Fanny Cerrito. Others represented are Lucile Grahn, Marie Guy Stephan, Flora Fabbri, Louise Fairbrother, Celine Celeste and two men: Saint Leon and Perrot, "most remarkable male dancer between the time of Vestris and Nijinski."

Degas Dance Drawing, by Paul Valery, translated by Helen Burlin, with four colored plates. Lear-Crown. $5.

VALERY, who met Degas in the 1880's and became as much a friend as the unpredictable temper of the artist would permit, here employs Degas as starting point for a series of esthetic reflections. There are many stories about Degas, whose caustic tongue made him eminently quotable. From them Valery proceeds to a consideration of Degas' art, his "infallible taste," his frank reliance on the camera, his preoccupation with not only dancers but also the laundress, the racehorse and other familiar subjects as fascinating "mathematical" problems for the artist.

Year 1948. Year, Inc.-Farrar, Straus. $5.

IN almost 200 great big pages, with an estimated 70,000-word text and some 700 photographs, this is the story of the dramatic year now ending (plus occasional items carried over from 1947). "Clouded by war — divided by conflicting ideologies—the world still seeks lasting peace," we learn from the first heading, and then go on to atom bomb, Russo-American relations, United Nations, Palestine, Red satellites, the Far East, and among other subjects the United States, which, with sections on elections, inflation, the 80th Congress, fashions, sports, travel, the arts, makes up a good half of the volume. Looks like an Xmas gift for news-minded friends.

The Decorative Arts of Sweden, by Iona Plath. Scribner's. $10.

IF YOU want to know what the Swedes have done, and can do, with their hands, here is an exhaustive account, in more than 500 illustrations and an explanatory text, of the work of several hundred years in textiles, ceramics, metal, glass, wood and wall paintings. Swedish glass, such as Orrefors, was already known here; and ceramics seems to be a thriving business today. But many readers will be pleasantly surprised by the vigorous old wall paintings, apparently brilliantly colored and obviously of an authentic primitive inspiration, and the beautiful shapes and rich designs in wood, such as chests, chairs, cradles, benches, beds, cupboards, spoons, butter presses, porringers and the like.

Scottish Crafts, by Ian Finlay. Chanticleer. $5.

IT IS in architecture and metal work that Scottish artistry becomes most apparently Scottish, says Finlay, but he includes in his survey sculpture, carving, textiles, ceramics, glass and printing. There are 80 illustrations, some in color.

An Enigma Made Understandable

The Tsar Who First Looked West

By Doris Bomar

THE CITY AND THE TSAR. By Harold Lamb. Doubleday. 368 pp. $4.50.

"THE shy, mystical and brutal Peter Alexeivich had been devoted to Russia; to that devotion, never thinking of his own career, he had sacrificed himself." So Harold Lamb describes Peter the Great, the Tsar of all of Rus, who began the westernization of Muscovy.

Peter, the uneducated social boor, was the first Russian Tsar to cross its western frontier; he was the first to demand of his people that they give up their beards and adopt Western manners and dress. He built Petersburg, a beautiful replica of Paris, and moved his government there from Moscow. He built a strong navy for a people who were innately afraid of the water.

HAROLD LAMB

These changes Peter believed to be in the best interests of his beloved Russia. But his was a most conflicting nature. Due to his shyness and nervous attacks, he drank excessively and demanded that others join him. Some of the tipplers died at these drinking bouts. He put aside his lawful wife and made a foreign peasant his Tsarina. His only son and heir was killed with his knowledge. This man full of contrasts, both admirable and detestable, is one of the most enigmatic characters in history.

Harold Lamb, with his superb mastery of words, patience with facts and fervid interest in history, has written a brilliant story of Russia between 1648 and 1762. He has made Peter the Great, partially, at least, an understandable person rather than a name in history. He has done the same with towering figures such as Genghis Khan, Alexander of Macedon and Tamerlane.

Hervey Allen Hews to Facts Until It Comes to Villains

"ALL MY villains are imaginary," says Hervey Allen of the characters in his latest best-selling novel, "Toward the Morning," and he adds: "I'm glad they are."

The author recently began a trip through the central Pennsylvania country where his stalwart hero, Salathiel Albine, and the beautiful Melissa traveled from Bedford Village toward Philadelphia.

Descendants of his eighteenth century pioneers still living in the cities and towns he planned to visit "will bring me old letters, tell me all about their ancestors and point out my mistakes" . . .

Errors are bad, he acknowledges, for he takes the calling of historical novelist seriously and feels a "great sense of responsibility." A writer in his field who does not do full justice to the facts "can't be a good citizen." The public gets its historical "information" from history books but its "ideas of history" from fiction, he believes.

He is as careful in his writing as in his research. The first draft is done longhand, partly because he is a one-finger typist and partly because he mistrusts a typed page. "If I see it in type I read fast, and instead of stopping to work it over I let myself enjoy it, and think what a fine fellow am I."

With Allen, the novel begins with people and places, not with ideas; he says it's bad art to break off a story with asides about. "The philosophical content of my book is such-and-such."

But there is philosophical content in Allen. World War I combatant and World War II Government consultant, he has taught in several colleges and universities, most recently at Columbia.

Philosophy Salts Marital Guide

The American Woman in Modern Marriage. By Sonya Ruth Das. 185 pp. $3.75. The Philosophical Library.

AN ANALYSIS and history of the American woman's place in the dynamic institution that is modern marriage, this book might well serve as an erudite guide to conjugal happiness for people of all ages.

Beginning with the American woman's growth in personality due to voluntary motherhood, economic independence, political freedom and intellectual progress, Dr. Das traces the development of modern marriage; gives causes and effects of divorce, suggests remedial measures for the increase in divorce rates.

She describes the American family as a democratic organization where the wife is not only the center of home life, but shares with her husband equal responsibility for the children. With these rights and privileges achieved by our modern woman in marriage, she has gained morally and spiritually in her relationship.

In conclusion, Dr. Das says that the real basis of peace and happiness between husband and wife is unreserved and unstinted love, devotion and service to each other.

The personal philosophy of Dr. Das included in this book makes it much more than a collection of interesting data. She has traveled extensively in the United States, Europe and India, and has contributed articles on marriage and women's affairs to foreign periodicals.

She was graduated from the gymnasium in her native Russia, and came to the United States in 1913 to study at the John B. Stetson University in Florida, College of the City of New York and Columbia University. In 1922 she married Dr. Rajani Kanta Das, with whom she went to Europe to study and travel. She did most of her graduate work at the University of Paris.

Balancing the Books

By Lee Grove

OVERWHELMED by the new 1473-page Huntington Cairns anthology, "The Limits of Art," I put it on the family scale, only to discover it weighed less than 3 pounds.

Then, making due allowance for the fact it is printed on Bible paper, I came to the conclusion it was the wealth of reading on the editor's part that was so overwhelming. Having also heard a rumor that the landlord had expressed fears that the Cairns' second-floor apartment at 2219 California st. nw. would collapse under the weight of books, I make a trip to the National Gallery of Art to inquire of Cairns about it.

HUNTINGTON CAIRNS
. . . "You need 25,000 books"

After all, an anthology that includes everything that critics from Aristotle to T. S. Eliot have considered perfection in Western literature is not dreamed up overnight.

Cairns said the anthology took six years of preparation, neglecting to mention the years of reading that preceded the day he decided to do the book, which is a superlative desert-island library in itself.

There is cause for the landlord to worry. The Cairns library now consists of 12,000 volumes, mostly in the fields of philosophy, jurisprudence and criticism, but, he says, "you need 25,000 books for a good working library."

In this instance, "working" is no idle word. In addition to the newly published "Limits of Art," the Johns Hopkins Press is bringing out Cairn's "Legal Philosophy from Plato to Hegel" the first of the year, and another book that he is editing, "Lectures in Criticism," is in page proof.

Leon S. Anderson of Knopf tells me that the house is bringing out a book early in February by Bess Furman of the New York Times Washington Bureau. The book is titled "Washington Byline, A Personal History of a Washington Newspaperwoman," and covers the years from the Smith-Hoover campaign to the Dewey-Truman. The author is the wife of Robert Armstrong, jr., also a newspaper correspondent.

Choice Gobbledygook

WENDELL BROOKS PHILLIPS and James Masterson were working together in the same office of National Archives when for their own amusement they started a collection of absurd examples of officialese.

As the collection grew, they decided they should write a magazine article, but the article turned into the book published by the University of North Carolina Press and now in the shops: "Federal Prose." Jo Thoms, who holds a scholarship at the Corcoran Gallery Art School, illustrated the book, gems for which were gathered over a period of four years.

Phillips and Masterson are now working in the Army Department historical division. After hours, Phillips is working on a novel of small college life circa 1912, and Masterson on a nonfiction book about colonial American travelers.

Cheaper by Year

IF 1948 is not remarkable for anything else, it should go down in history as the year in which a new bimonthly magazine for the general reader was announced at the modest price of $30 a copy, or $150 a year.

It is "Nation's Heritage," scheduled to start in January. The announcement describes the magazine as nine tenths pictorial and carrying no advertising. "Permanent departmental headings for all issues," it says, "include the Arts, Learning, Diversion, The Land, Industry, The People, The Home and Fragments—the latter for Americana miscellany."

ODD JOTS—Dr. H. L. Wilson, chairman of the Arts Club of Washington literary section, is announcing the start of a literary quarterly by the organization. . . . Herbert Asbury, author of "The Barbary Coast" and other entertaining studies of low life, has signed a contract with Doubleday to do a book on the prohibition period; it will be called "The Wild Years." . . . Alfred Fowler, the fine prints dealer, is now displaying his attractive wares at 1714 Connecticut ave. . . . First ladies of the land, from Martha Washington to Mary Lincoln inclusive, are the subject of "The First First Ladies" by Mary Ormsbee Whitton, a new Hastings House publication.

'Catsbrains' Is a Tricky Place Name

ENGLISH PLACE-NAMES. By H. G. Stokes. Batsford. 120 pp. Ill. $3.75.

TO UNDERSTAND a country's place-names is to have a pretty good idea of the country itself in times past, for place-names reflected the life of the time.

In the days before official boards of nomenclature and chambers of commerce, place names grew out of the soil and the people who walked on it. Sometimes a place-name was a geographical description, sometimes it referred to a local resident, sometimes to an event. It was handed on by word of mouth, and polished like folk music.

For H. G. Stokes, the place names of England are puzzles in which he delights. He seeks to learn the original meanings of names on which Saxon, Scandinavian and Norman French have all had strong influence.

Ugglebarnby, he finds, means "Owlbeard's Farm." Banbury referred to a person called "Bana," and in the seventeenth century was famous for its Puritans—one of whom hanged his cat on Monday for killing a mouse on Sunday. Wye in Kent was derived from "weoh" or "wih," which referred to idol or image, and is a relic of pre-Christian days.

Piccadilly is thought to refer to a seventeenth century ruff or "piccadil." Oxford was a place where oxen could cross the river, but Catsbrains in Buckinghamshire did not refer to mousers, but to a mixture of clay and stone, or clay and chalk, common there. (Place names can be tricky).

Adding to the attractiveness of Stokes' book are more than 50 illustrations, including a frontispiece in color, of maps and places mentioned in the compact text.

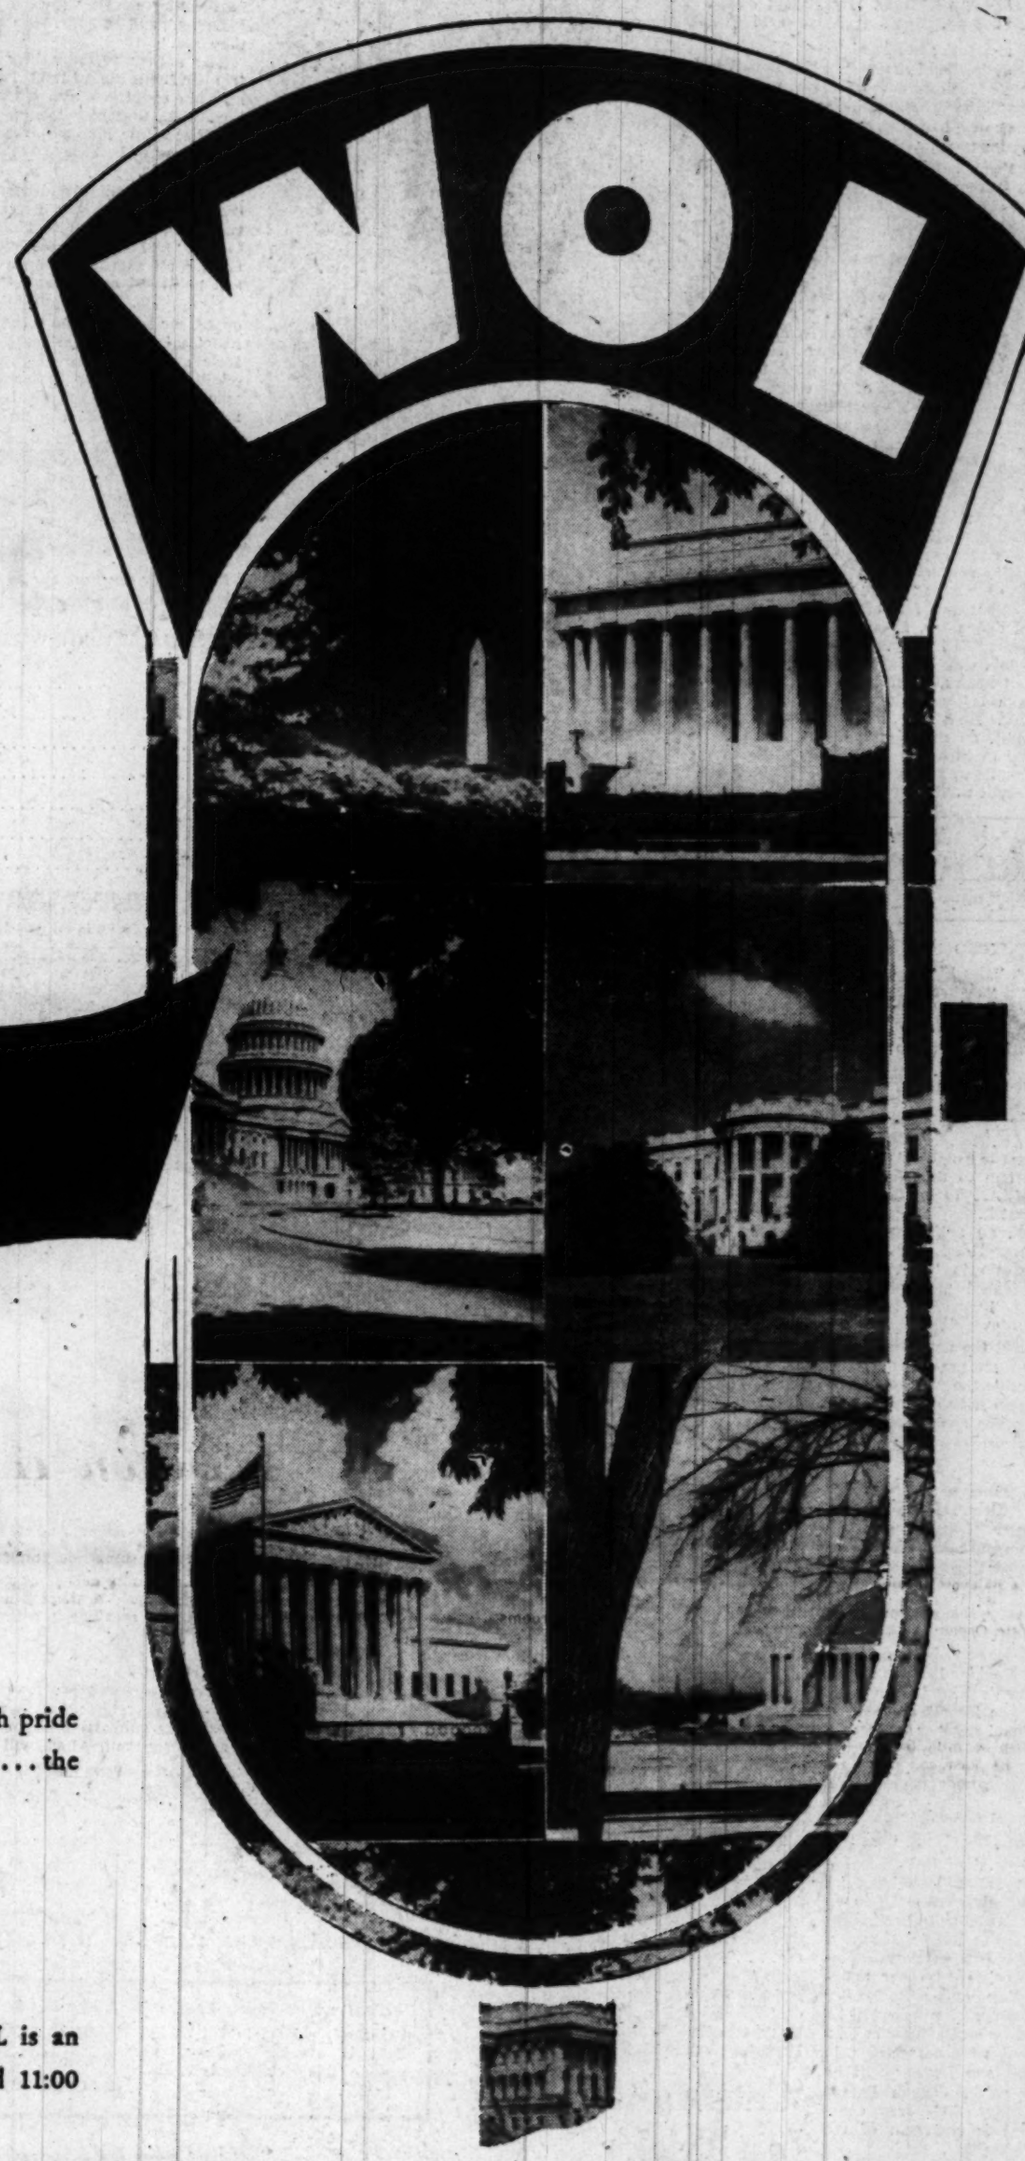
How newcomers become well-informed Washingtonians



Newcomers to Washington soon learn to know the city's institutions. With as much pride as any oldtimer, they can point out the White House . . . the Washington Monument . . . the Lincoln Memorial . . . the Supreme Court . . . and the Federal buildings.

TO KEEP WELL-INFORMED ON EVENTS BOTH INSIDE AND OUTSIDE WASHINGTON, OLDTIMERS RELY ON ANOTHER WASHINGTON INSTITUTION

The General Electric Company's "Voice of Washington" on Radio Station WOL is an institution on Washington radio dials. Monday through Saturday—7:30 A. M. and 11:00 P. M.—this comprehensive report on current events is yours at 1260 on the dial.

No expense is spared to give you, not only all-around, unbiased news, but also the guiding forces behind the news. General Electric's "Voice of Washington" brings you, not editorial comment, but the actual principals themselves—the policy-makers of our times.

"The Voice of Washington" is the news broadcast to which official Washington turns for incisive, uncolored reporting on important developments here, across the Nation, and around the world. Caps Turn On Bombers in 87-63 Victory

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

To Whom It May Concern:

SMALL wonder the National Football League is considering cutting the team rosters from 35 to 33 players. John Mara, president of the Giants, reveals that in 1939 his player payroll was $40,000, jumped to $100,000 in 1941 and reached $250,000 last year.

POVICH

Branch Rickey, who took over the Brooklyn franchise in the All-America Conference, budgeted his losses at $300,000 for the first two seasons, only to learn that the first year of operation would cost him that much . . . the Redskins not only over-rated their title chances this year, but they are over-rating their press conferences. They solemnly called morning newspapermen out of bed the other morning to make the so-what announcement of the signing of Bob Goode of Texas A. & M., of whom few ever heard . . . Billy Conn was no help to himself on a national radio hook-up with Harry Wismer. Asked about a bout he was fighting in Texas on his current exhibition tour, Conn couldn't remember his opponent's name . . . when Internal Revenue men descended on Washington's recent six-day bike race to collect admission taxes, they discovered a committee of riders had beaten them to the cash drawer. Promoter Jim Proscia ripped an expensive ring off his finger and gave it to the tax men as collateral. They were appeased, and gave him a formal receipt.

GENE Bearden, Cleveland's World Series hero and baseball's handsomest pitcher, passed Hollywood screen tests and has acquired an agent plus a part in a horse opera . . . five more Washington high school coaches, miffed by the school board's refusal to pay them for extra duties, soon will quit, thus following the lead of Eastern's Roland Lund and Roosevelt's Herman Littman . . . Charlie Justice, neck-deep in All-American honors, was presented a radio as a gift. He gave it over to his teammates, who drew lots, with End Art WWeiner, the winner . . . King Louis X of France outlawd tennis as a sport when the commoners started playing the game which he declared "was intended only for royalty." . . . Navy's coach, George Sauer, has been honored with selection as the All-Time fullback of the East-West Shrine game. He represented Nebraska in the game in 1934 . . . the Chicago Cardinals, winners over the Bears in three of their last four meetings, trace their 21-14 defeat by the Bears earlier in the season to the Stan Mauldin tragedy. During the week of the game, Cardinal Tackle Mauldin died of a heart attack that left the whole club depressed . . . the Bears were helped to victory by a break in the third quarter when they were trailing, 17-14. The Cards gained the ball on a punt by the Bears but were penalized for having 12 men on the field, and the Bears regained the ball and went to a touchdown.

THE NATS were uninterested when the White Sox put Pitcher Frank Papish on the market and sold him to the Cleveland Indians. Washington operatives learned that Papish had suffered from numbness in his pitching fingers for most of the season . . . Jimmy Dykes is attending the Major League baseball meetings in the hope of a job as a big league coach, after turning down managerial jobs in the minors . . . Clark Shaugnessy, who was hired as a stop-gap head coach of the Los Angeles Rams after Bob Snyder was fired, brought the Rams along so fast at the finish of the season his contract will be renewed . . . Frank Tripucka, in four years at Notre Dame, surpassed the passing feats of Johnny Lujack and Angelo Bertelli for the Irish with a percentage of .567 completions compared to Lujack's .514 and Bertelli's .522 . . . Pop Warner is against the free substitution rule in football and declares the practice of inserting offensive and defensive units results in the development of only "half" football players. "I can't imagine any boy who would want to play guard on defense for three seasons of his college career" . . . Sports Editor Arch Ward, promoter of the Chicago Tribune's All-Star football game, may read the National Football League champions out of it and stage his 1949 game between the College All-Americans and the champions of the All-American Conference.

IN 1942, at the height of the blitz bombing of England, a London schoolboy named Norman G. Clark was hustled out of the country for refuge in America. The other day he was elected captain of Dartmouth's soccer team . . . Bill Veeck, indignant at the reports that he is a mere minority stockholder in the Indians, declared the other day, "I own twice as much stock as Hank Greenberg" . . . latest pro football report is that Ted Collins, Boston owner in the National League, is angling to buy out Dan Topping's interest in the New York Yankees of the AAC, and move his Boston franchise to Yankee Stadium with the consent of the Giants, who own the NFL territorial rights . . . the University of Oklahoma will use its $100,000 guarantee from the Sugar Bowl game to help increase the capacity of its home stadium from 33,000 to 50,000 . . . Buck Newsom, now an Orlando, Fla., resident, is making one more pitch for a big league job, in a new direction—the Cleveland Indians . . . on the betting front: The Colts are 6-point favorites to beat Buffalo for the Eastern title in the AAC; the Eagles are 14-point choices over the Detroit Lions; the Rams, 14 points over Pittsburgh . . . the Giants, who took a 41-10 beating from the Redskins in October, today are 6-point favorites against the deflated 'Skins.

Stuhldreher Resigns as Wisconsin's Grid Coach

Madison, Wis., Dec. 11 (AP).—Harry Stuhldreher gave up his post as head football coach at the University of Wisconsin today. But the surrender didn't cost him much.

Under heavy fire all season, he resigned in a dramatic move but kept his position as athletic director and his $12,000 yearly salary.

"The double job was getting too tough," Stuhldreher said.

The board of regents agreed and sent University President E. B. Fred out into the market place to find a successor.

Stuhldreher's 1948 team wound up in the Big Nine cellar with only one conference victory. It won one other game in nine starts.

Student Referendum Off

The "Good-Bye Harry" boys, who unfurled their banner in the midseason Yale game—which favored Wisconsin lost, 17-7—spearheaded a State-wide assault on his position.

His resignation came four days before a student referendum on his status. But, Stuhldreher said, that had nothing to do with his decision, which actually was made last Tuesday. Anyway, the vote was called off.

Stuhldreher, who quarterbacked Notre Dame's famed Four Horsemen, under Knute Rockne, found his thirteenth seaso noa jinx. It ended the longest current tenure in the conference. His teams won 45 games, lost 62 and tied 6.

The Badger mentor's plight first came to nationwide attention after Mrs. Stuhldreher wrote a magazine article called "Football Fans Aren't Human." It related the woes of a big-time coach's wife, particularly in a bad year. In a discussion of "where the ax will fall this year," she eliminated every conference school but Wisconsin.

Today at Chicago, she declined to make any statement on the subject.

Names of possible successors mentioned in alumni circles include Paul Brown, coach of the All-America Conference Cleveland Browns; Lisle Blackbourn, sr., present Wisconsin backfield coach; Vince Gavre, former Badger star and freshman coach who now is football coach at Western (Colo.) State College, Win O. Brockmeyer, Wausau (Wis.) Prep coach who has compiled a phenomenal record.

COME ALONG, SONNY—Lanky Ariel Maughan (left) of the St. Louis Bombers, grabs Sonny Hertzberg of the Caps, by the wrist as if to say, "Come along, Sonny, you're not going to get that ball" in last night's game at Uline Arena. The ball is under Sonny's feet. But the Caps got the ball often enough to win, 87-63. The win was No. 17 in 19 starts for the Caps

Hoyas Lose To NYU, 70-59

New York, Dec. 11.—For 30 minutes a fighting Georgetown basketball team battled favored NYU to a standstill tonight before 18,411 fans at Madison Square Garden. But a slick-shooting sophomore sensation named Bob Derderian cracked the game wide open with two successive field goals to give the Violets a six-point lead as NYU proceeded to roll on to a 70-59 triumph.

St. John's unbeaten Redmen ran up their fifth victory by thumping winless Rhode Island State, 67-50, in the second half of the doubleheader.

The Hoyas made a fight of it until the final minutes when they roared back to cut a 12-point handicap to eight. But when Tom O'Keefe fouled out with five to go and Vince Leddy went out the same way a minute later the Hoyas' cause was a lost one.

A tipoff on the closeness of the battle was indicated at the very start when the Violets found it impossible to snare more than a four-point margin over the Hoyas as the lead changed hands eight times and the game was tied on seven other occasions in the first 20 minutes of action.

Georgetown's best showing came in the last four minutes of the half when the invaders, trailing by 31-27, found the hoop for seven points with Brown and Corley showing the way as NYU could retaliate with only one point. But in the last 27 seconds Derderian made a basket and a foul to give the Violets a 37-36 edge at intermission.

The ding-dong session continued late in the second half as Leddy pitched in two foul goals to send his team within two points of the lead, 49-47, with 10 to go. But at this stage NYU rose to the occasion by scoring 10 successive tallies to seal the issue.

Derderian's 22 points gave him shooting honors, while O'Kefee, with 12, was the lone Hoya to hit the double figure mark.

Baugh Wages Passing Duel With Conerly

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

New York, Dec. 11.—National Football League passing records are certain to wobble and perhaps fall tomorrow as the Washington Redskins and New York Giants, also-rans in the Eastern Division, wind up their 1948 seasons at the Polo Grounds.

In the twenty-fourth meeting of the rivals since the Redskins moved to Washington, the feature is expected to be a passing duel between Slingin' Sammy Baugh and Charley Conerly, the Giants' ace rookie.

Baugh holds most of the NFL's lifetime passing marks, but sparks a Redskin outfit that will be a 7-point underdog. The reason is that Conerly, former Mississippi collegiate star, has started clicking with his passes in every direction.

Conerly set a league mark for completions—36—last week despite his team's loss to Pittsburgh. He tried 53 passes. Baugh's top performances were 49 passes attempted against the Giants in 1944, and 26 passes completed against the Bears in 1947.

In 12 years of competition between New York and Washington, one or the other team has held the Eastern crown 10 times. This year, however, the 'Skins are already committed to second place and the Giants to third.

The Giants hold a 13-9 edge in victories and the twenty-third meeting, early in 1939, put the only scoreless tie in Redskin history on the books.

Whether the title is at stake or not, the 20,000 fans expected at tomorrow's clash will anticipate an exciting struggle. The 'Skins and Giants have always played like that.

There was the Redskins' first game at Griffith Stadium back in 1937. Riley Smith scored all the home team's points as they whipped the New Yorkers, 13-3. And a later game the same season when 10,000 Washingtonians follower the team to New York, saw Cliff Battles race 75 and 76 yards for touchdowns in a 49-14 rout.

Sharpsburg Sharp Enough to Win With 2 Men Left on Court

Sharpsburg, Iowa, Dec. 11 (AP).—Although it had only two men remaining on the floor at the finish, Sharpsburg came through with a 43-41 basketball victory over Conway last night.

Sharpsburg had only five men at the start and one became ill a short time later. His four teammates carried on until one of them went out on fouls with two minutes to go.

Then there were three—three, that is, until another player went out with one minute to go. Then there were two. The two managed to hold Conway.

Loyola Edges Terps, 77-75

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 11.—Loyola College halted a last-minute challenge by the University of Maryland to score a 77-to-75 basketball victory at the Coliseum tonight.

The Terps appeared to be beaten with less than five minutes left when they trailed the Greyhounds, 72 to 67. But the Old Liners rallied from a five-point deficit in the final two minutes and goals by Gene Brownley and Spence Wright all but spilled the hosts in the fading seconds.

Actually the Terps' downfall could be contributed directly to the clever hook shooting of Bob Anderson, 6-foot 5 freshman center of Loyola who tossed in 25 points. His last four points counted heavily as they were the final ones for the Greyhounds.

Wright's last two-pointer for Maryland came with 50 seconds left. Loyola grabbed the ball and successfully froze the leather down to the whistle. Twice Maryland guarding caused fouls but the Loyolans took the ball out of bounds rather than take a chance of losing it on the free lane.

Spence Wright topped the Maryland scorers with 18 points.

Nats Trying To Deal With Yanks, Tigers

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Chicago, Dec. 11.—Trade talk by the Washington Club turned in the direction of the New York Yankees and the Detroit Tigers today with First Baseman Mickey Vernon offered as the No. 1 lure.

Vice President Calvin Griffith and Manager Joe Kuhel of the Nats were visited in their hotel suite by General Managers George Weiss of the Yankees and Billy Evans of Detroit, but no deals progressed beyond the haggling stage.

Griffith admitted that Vernon was on the market, but at no cheap price. The Nats are insisting on first base protection in any deal plus an infielder or a first-line pitcher.

The Yankees have offered First Baseman Steve Souchock for Vernon, but are balking at including a pitcher in the deal. They also are willing to give up Souchock in a deal that would bring them Walter Masterson or Early Wynn from the Nats.

Tribe Also Interested

If a Washington pitcher figures in a trade with the Yankees, however, the Nats will insist on Outfielder Hank Bauer, the big right-handed hitter who was brought up from the Yankees' Kansas City farm last season.

Detroit is displaying an avid interest in Vernon, whom they envisage as a home-run hitter in their tailor-made park, and is willing to give up big George Vico, their own first baseman. That deal is being balked by Washington's demand for a ptcher in addition, preferably Art Houtteman.

Vice President Griffith also talked today with President Bill Veeck of the Indians, who is also interested in Vernon. Veeck is willing to give up First Baseman Robinson but the Nats are also demanding Infielder Al Rosen.

The Washington club, which sold Second Baseman Gerry Priddy to the Browns for $25,000 last year, learned today that they parted with him cheaply, what with the Tigers now offering $100,000 for Priddy in a cash deal.

Manager Kuhel, haunting the lobbies for possible deals that would bring the Nats a shortstop, the position that is his chief concern, tonight declared that he would trade a pitcher only if he could strengthen his infield.

Dillinger Still in Demand

"If we don't come up with a shortstop, then we can't afford to weaken our pitching staff," said Kuhel. "We're in the market for pitchers ourselves and no pitcher is going to leave our club unless somebody comes through with a shortstop who can hit."

The Nats made a brief attempt to interest the Red Sox in a deal that might bring Shortstop Johnny Pesky to Washington in a swap for a pitcher, but the Red Sox laughed off that proposal.

The frenzied bidding for Bob Dillinger, Browns' third baseman who led the league in number of hits last season, continued apace with the Yankees, Athletics and White Sox offering large cash sums, plus players.

At one point today, it was reported that the Yankees would an-

Bears Face Cards, Baltimore Host to Bills in Title Games

Playoff in A.-A.C. Is 'Sudden Death'

Baltimore, Dec. 11.—The resurgent Baltimore Colts, who won only one game all last year, meet the Buffalo Bills for the All-America Conference's Eastern Division championship tomorrow in Babe Ruth Stadium.

The Colts whipped the Bills, 35 to 15, last Sunday to tie the New Yorkers for the Eastern title. Each team won seven regular season games and dropped the same number.

The winner of tomorrow's outing, which is expected to attract 40,000 observers, clashes with the all-conquering Cleveland Browns next Sunday in Cleveland for the AAC crown.

Just in case the teams wind up with the score tied at the end of the regulation game tomorrow the teams will rest three minutes and go right on playing as many as 15-minute quarter periods as necessary until one scores.

The regular meetings between Baltimore and Buffalo give no clue to a favorite in the playoff. The Bills won an early season tilt by 35-17, only two points different from last Sunday's outcome in reverse.

The spotlight again will be on the rival passing quarterbacks, George Ratterman of the Bills and Y. A. Tittle of the Colts. Last Sunday Coach Cecil Isbell sort of crossed up the Bills by cutting down Tittle's passing and coming up with a surprisingly improved running game.

Tittle, the second best passer in the conference, threw only 14,

NFL Western Crown At Stake in Chicago

Chicago, Dec. 11 (AP).—Chicago's professional football season will reach an explosive climax Sunday when the Bears and National Football League Champion Cardinals, each beaten only once in 11 starts, battle for the Western Division title.

The dramatic regular season finale in which the right to meet the Champion Philadelphia Eagles of the Eastern Division is at stake will pack more than 50,000 fans into Wrigley Field.

Possibly because the contest will be televised, there have been no reports of ticket scalping, but seldom has a grid clash, pro or collegiate, captured Chicago area interest as has this blazing civic showdown.

The workshops, stores and over the back-fence, all sports conversation has centered on the probable outcome of the tangle in which the betmakers have called the Bears a 6½-point favorite.

The one loss suffered by the Cardinals was a 28-17 defeat by the Bears at Comiskey Park on October 4. The sole Bear reversal was a 12-7 setback by the Eagles in the mud at Philadelphia on October 14.

Excepting that each team then had lost three games, the situation is the same as last season before the Cards spilled the Bears, 30-21, in the regular campaign windup for the Western title. The Bears were favored then, too.

The Cards then went on to whip

Pity (Agri)cultural Oklahomans—

The Law the City Can Repeal Or It'll Hear No Glockenspiel

Stillwater, Okla., Dec. 11 (AP)—Down here in the land of fine cows and football teams, the agriculturists at Oklahoma A. and M. College have a problem that even overshadows who'll get up to do the milking.

It's the cowbell, and will the quiet, venerable Memphis allow the sonorous tones of that Oklahoma glockenspiel sound out at the Delta Bowl game New Year's Day.

The Aggies meet William and Mary in the postseason game, and word has trickled back here that even the sound of an auto horn is frowned upon at Memphis.

Compared to an auto horn, the cowbell sounds like the thunder of a stampeding herd of white-face cattle.

And without that cowbell, an Aggie rooter is lost. Each fan carries his own bell and not only clangs it during the game, but through the town before and after.

No locomotive team cheer or Aggie fight song would be complete without the pealing of that farm-yard instrument accompanied by a hog call or two.

There are hushed whispers among the Aggie students of sneaking the cowbells into Memphis for the game, and even louder talk of asking an outright dispensation from Memphis city fathers so that the cowbell can be openly displayed.

The only ones in Aggieland not concerned with the issue are the cows, who give up their bells for the game.

They are still contented.

5 Lengths Ahead . . .

Citation Sets Record At Tanforan

San Bruno, Calif., Dec. 11 (AP).—Citation, king of the American turf, won the $50,000-added Tanforan Handicap today by five lengths, galloping easily. The time for the mile and one quarter was 2:02 4/5.

The 3-year-old Calumet Farm star set a new track record in running away from six Western stakes stars, the best available talent that could be induced to race against him. The old record was 2:03 2/5, set last year by Burning Dream, winner of the first Tanforan Handicap.

Citation led Stepfather, $200,000 Beau Pere Colt of the W-L ranch by five full lengths and the latter finished two lengths ahead of third place See-Tee-See.

Went Off at 1-20

He paid $2.10, $2.10 and $2.10. Stepfather returned $2.40 and $2.10; See-Tee-See, $2.10.

Citation packed high weight of 123 pounds and was ridden by his regular jockey, Eddie Arcaro.

The beautiful bay colt, by Bull Lea, broke on top. Tropical Sea, toting light weight of the field at 105 pounds, temporarily headed the champion shortly after they broke from the gate. Citation charged back into the lead quickly, however, and was never headed.

19th Win in 20 Starts

Only in the late stretch run did Arcaro give his great mount a flick of the whip. It was an unnecessary gesture. Citation was winning and seemingly knew it. He thundered over the finish line to the cheers of 24,809 fans.

It was Citation's nineteenth victory out of 20 starts this year and his twenty-seventh win out of 29 races in two years.

The victory was worth $31,800. It brought his total earnings for two years to $865,150.

Citation is second only to Stymie in total earnings, the latter with the world's record figure of $911,335. He was so heavily bet it resulted in a minus pool of $10,464.64, mostly in the show money, where the track lost $9,246.60.

Citation's fractions in the running were: Quarter, 24 3-5; half, 48; three-quarter, 1:13, and mile, 1:37 3-5.

The Calumet colt now will be shipped to Santa Anita where he is nominated for the $100,000-added Santa Anita Handicap on February 26.

The rest of the field finished as follows:

Tropical Sea, Happy Issue, Cash Reward and Texas Sandman.

GW Defeats Spiders, 68-49

George Washington University found two scoring guns in Phil McNiff and Johnny Moffatt, and they shot the Colonials to a 68-49 victory over the University of Richmond last night before 650 fans at the Armory.

In flashing their best form since their opener against Quantico, the GW's tacked up their second straight Southern Conference win against one setback. Five-foot, 10-inch Art Haines was Richmond's only consistently good player, and he hooked in 15 points in the Spiders' opener.

The Spiders found it hard to cut under the basket against the tight-guarding Colonials, and Haines' running hook shot from the foul line was their only weapon.

Moffatt, playing his best game, tossed in eight of his 15 points in the first quarter to boost the Colonials into a 31-18 halftime lead. The closest Richmond came after that was to move up to a 33-23 deficit against the GW secondstringers.

GW Coach George Garber put his first team back in with five minutes left and McNiff, mostly on set shots, scored 12 points in those closing minutes. He wound up with 15 points.

In the preliminary, the George Washington freshmen defeated the Marine Headquarters, 53-42. Wally

Hertzberg, Feerick High In Avenging Recent Loss

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

The Caps returned to Uline Arena, Freddie Scholari returned to the lineup and the local pros returned to the victory column all in the same evening last night.

Bouncing back from their overtime loss to the same club in Chicago Friday, Washington's hot-shot makers blasted the St. Louis Bombers, 87 to 63, before an appreciative audience of 4041 observers.

It was a close ball game for 24 of its 48 minutes. After that, the Caps had things all their own way as they won their seventeenth game in 19 starts. Only the Bombers, the Western Division's second-place team and Indianapolis, hold decisions over the somewhat sensational Eastern Division pace-setters.

Scoring Well Distributed

Five of the Caps shot into the double figure column last night, but you'd have to say that Sonny Hertzberg, the flashy Brooklynite who wasn't good enough for the New York Knicks, was the ringleader.

Hertzberg, whose 14 points tied Bobby Feerick for high scoring laurels on the Caps, got most of his in the first half when it was a touch and go contest.

The little set-shot specialist rammed in 12 of his points before intermission when the score was tied six times and the lead switched hands nine times.

Hertzberg's fifth basket and his fourteenth point came early in the third period when the Bombers trailed only by 5 points. Sonny's shot set off a Washington scoring barrage which completely smothered the Bombers, who fell back and back as the game progressed.

Logan Tops at 15 Points

Johnny Logan, whose 15 points topped both clubs, kept St. Louis in the tussle for the first half. He was stopped virtually cold in the second half.

In addition to a man-sized contribution to the offense, Sonny collaborated with Leo Katkaveck, the rookie star from North Carolina State, to put a blanket around Belus Smawley, St. Louis' best scorer. Smawley was restricted to only two field goals and two free throws.

While Hertzberg instigated the third-half rebellion which broke the game wide open, Matt Zunic and Scolari finished it. Scolari, playing for the first time since he injured his ankle last week, poured in four baskets in the third period while former G. W. star Zunic rammed in 8 of the 11 points he mustered.

The Caps went into the third period leading by only 7 points, 39-32. They came out of it on top by 14 points, 60-46, and played the last quarter strictly for the amusement of the spectators.

And they amused them plenty, too, bagging 27 points in the final 12-minute period.

St. Joseph's Beats Oklahoma Aggies

Philadelphia, Dec. 11 (AP).—Unbeaten St. Joseph's College of Philadelphia turned in one of the biggest early season basketball upsets tonight by edging highly rated Oklahoma A. and M. College, 46 to 43, in the first game of a doubleheader at Convention Hall. It was St. Joseph's fifth straight win and the first loss in two outings for the Aggies.

Most Courageous Athlete?—

12-Year-Old Becomes Star After Ordering Amputation

Binghamton, N. Y., Dec. 11 (U.P.).—The Philadelphia Athletics' Lou Brissie, who recovered from severe war wounds and came back to star on the pitcher's mound, doesn't stand a chance around here as the most courageous athlete of the year.

A 12-year-old boxer and softball player with no left leg has that honor all sewed up.

He's Burt Schwartz, a nervy kid who made the decision himself that the leg had to come off.

This summer, he won the Binghamton Boys Club award for being an outstanding athlete—even though he played ball and boxed on a crutch.

His left leg was wasting away from a disease called psuedoarthrosis. Two operations had put Burt in a cast for eight months apiece. After each operation, his leg was shorter.

Three weeks ago, the doctors told Burt he'd have to have another bone-grafting operation. The alternative was amputation.

Burt's parents left the decision up to him. "Let's have it off," he said.

With the leg off, Burt knew he could throw away his crutch and get an artificial leg. He knew he could play better ball and box easier using the artificial leg than the crutch.

Burt's father knew how much that operation could do for his son, too. Right after the operation, he went out and bought Burt a bicycle for Christmas.

Julius Poms, McKinley Tackle, Heads Post's All-Metro Team

Joe Cardaci, Bob Allwine Named Again

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

Julius Poms, the 210-pound honor roll kid, who called the McKinley Tech signals from his tackle spot, is the honorary captain of The Washington Post's All-Metropolitan scholastic football team for 1948.

The 5-foot, 11-inch Poms, lone holdover from Tech's 1947 Interhigh championship team, heads The Washington Post's annual All-Metro picked from the All-Interhigh, all-suburban and all-private school selections.

Poms' play-calling, deadly tackling, and ability to swing out of the line to block for the ball carriers were the biggest factors in Tech's wnding up with a six and two record for the season. The Tech student body recognized his leadership by electing him president of the general organization (student government).

Two repeaters on the All-Metro first team are Guards Joe Cardaci of St. John's and the Bob Allwine of Anacostia. They are the key men in the star-studded line which averages 195 pounds per man.

Cardaci Only 16

Sixteen-year-old Cardaci, though a senior, is the youngest member of the team. His 200 pounds on a 5 foot 11 inch frame are mostly muscle. Speedy and a sure tackler, his chief forte was his devastating blocking, which earned his team ties with such club's as Central and Georgetown Prep.

Anacostia's attack, centered around delayed bucks off the guards and tackles, depended almost entirely on the rough, tough blocking of Allwine, who cleared a path to second place in the Interhigh League for his team.

Only junior on the otherwise all-senior first team is Central's sensational halfback Jimmy Pantos. The 155-pound ace called signals, passed, kicked, ran and tackled for his team, almost single-handedly to the Interhigh crown and a decisive victory over Gonzaga in a post-season game.

He was the fastest and most deceptive back in the city, who had a decided knack for rolling away from tacklers.

In the backfield with Pantos are Teddy Potts of Alexandria's George Washington High, Pete Corcoran of Georgetown Prep and Johnny Hogan of Gonzaga. Like Pantos, Potts, a 165-pounder, was the workhorse of the G. W. team. His 10 touchdown passes were instrumental in earning G.W. second place in the Virginia Group 1 League.

Corcoran, a 190-pounder, is the bruising line plunger and blocking back of the Metro team. He was Prep's most dependable ground gainer, and led it to the only undefeated record of the local schools. Hogan, 165-pounder, was Gonzaga's best and fastest ball carrier and was a better-than-average passer and punter.

Gonzaga's Mike Nolan and Georgetown Prep's Jude O'Donnell gain the end positions. Both stand 6 feet, 3 inches and weigh 185 pounds, are fast and sure-fingered pass catchers. O'Donnell was the best defensive end in the area, specializing in line-backing. Central's 205-pound tackle, Fotis Karousatos, is Pom's running mate at tackle. Black-haired, swarthy Fotis' specialty was charging in and spilling the opposing ball carrier before he could take a step.

At center is Washington-Lee of Arlington's Mike Lloyd, a 185-pound, 6-footer, who is coveted by every one of the local colleges. A fine snapper-back, he was W-L's captain, and most dependable linebacker.

Harbert Has 62 at Miami

Miami, Fla., Dec. 11 (AP).—Melvin (Chick) Harbert, Detroit professional, set a course record eight under par 30, 32—62 in the $10,000 Miami Open golf tournament today but Amateur Frank Stranahan of Toledo, Ohio, still led the field with 200 for 54 holes.

Harbert's sensational round lifted him from a tie for fifth place at the halfway mark to a firm second with 202 strokes. Herman Barron, White Plains, N. Y., took their place with a 66 today and a total of 206.

Stranahan, who posted 66s during the two opening rounds, shot 34, 34—68 today.

Harbert's score broke the record 63 set by Henry Picard of Cleveland and tied by Clayton Heafner of Charlotte, N. C., last year.

Herman Kaiser, Akron, Ohio, and Tony Penna, Cincinnati, had 207s with each posting par 70s. Claude Harmon of Palm Beach, Fla., was alone at 208 with his 70 today.

Bunched at 209 were Bob Hamilton, Landover, Md.; Otey Crisman, Miami Beach, Fla., and Steve Warga, jr., Miami.

Pre-tournament favorite Sammy Snead, White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., slipped to 72 today for a hefty 210, even par for the 54 holes. With him in that bracket were Skip Alexander, Southern Pines, N. C.; Johnny Palmer, Badin, N. C.; Pete Cooper, Ponte Vedra, Fla., and E. J. (Dutch) Harrison, Chicago.

Bunched at 211 were Lew Worsham, Washington, D. C.; George Bolesta, Tampa, Fla.; Fred Haas, jr., New Orleans; Horton Smith, Detroit, and Les Kennedy, Pawtucket, R. I.

Defending Champion Jimmy Demaret of Ojai, Calif., flew to a big 75 today and wound up with 212, the same score posted by Chandler Harper, Portsmouth, Va.; Herman Scharlau, Bloomington, Ill.; Lloyd Mangrum, Chicago, and Stan Staszowski, Winsted, Conn., who had tied Stranahan's 66 on opening day.

M'Ardle Chairman Of Committee on Junior Golf Play

Francis McArdle has been appointed chairman of a committee which will handle arrangements for the national junior golf tournament at the Congressional Country Club, July 27-30.

McArdle is chairman of the golf committee and a member of the board at Congressional, and is vice president of the District of Columba Golf Assocation.

Frank Emmet will serve as vice president of the national junior committee. Other members are William M. Briggs, Robert Brownell, Dr. Robert A. Keilty, Albert Steinem and Walter Tuckerman, all prominent in golf circles.

Texas Mines, Nevada Tops On Offense

New York, Dec. 11 (AP).—Two teams unheralded at the start of the season—Nevada and Texas Mines—broke the five-year stranglehold of Michigan, Notre Dame and Army on the Nation's major college football leadership in offense.

Nevada, supercharged by the passing of Stan Heath, captured team total offense honors for 1948 and ranked first as well in forward passing offense.

Texas Mines, powered by the record-breaking ground gaining of Fred Wendt, came fast as the finish to win team-rushing offense laurels.

Nevada started strongly, reaching a midseason peak, then tapered toward the end. The Miners from El Paso started slowly, but ran wild in their last two games with the New Mexico Aggies and Hawaii to outdistance Army and Notre Dame in the rushing classification.

The National Collegiate Athletic Bureau, in releasing final team figures today, noted that both Nevada and Texas Mines bettered the old record. The Reno Wolfpack accounted for an average of 487 yards per game by combined rushing and passing, to eclipse Army's 1945 standard of 462.7. Texas Mines averaged 378.3 yards per game on the ground to better Army's Blanchard-Davis average of 358.8 in 1945.

Nevada also bettered existing marks for average passing yards per game (255 against 233.9 by Tulsa in 1942) and for aerial touchdown (27 as against 23 by Georgia in 1946).

Army placed third in total offense and second in rushing. Notre Dame, tops in total offense in 1943 and 1946, and just nosed out in 1947, fell to fifth when Southern California slammed on the brakes December 4. Michigan State came in fourth. The Irish, however, finished third in rushing, followed by Michigan State, Oklahoma, California, Missouri and defending champion Detroit.

Notre Dame, finishing with a 396.4 yards per game average rushing and passing, fell below the 400-yard mark for the first time in three years.

Nevada bettered Mississippi's 1947 mark of 14.7 pass completions per game with a 15.6 record, but just failed to overtake the Ole Miss standard of 57.4 per cent completions for teams trying 200 or more passes a season. Nevada's percentage was 57.1.

Southern Methodist and Hardin-Simmons, while not throwing 200 or more, won marksmanship honors for their classification. The Mustangs were 59.6 per cent accurate, and the Cowboys, 59.5. Tulsa threw more passes than anybody else—even Nevada—going upstairs 265 times to rank third with a 157.6 yard average per contest.

Georgia finished fifth in passing, but continued to be the Nation's most consistent aerial exponent. The bureau said Georgia has ranked among the first 15 passing teams eight times in the last nine years, and among the top five six times. But the Bulldogs never have won the crown.

Michigan, the 1947 passing king, dropped to sixth, and the only other repeater, San Francisco, advanced from seventh to fourth.

Where four teams scored 300 or more points in 1947, six clubs did it the past season. Nevada's even 400 was tops, followed by Michigan State, 359; Texas Mines, 349; Vanderbilt, 328; Notre Dame, 320, and Missouri, 308.

Tar Heel Band Will Toot at $2500 a Minute in Sugar Bowl

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

CULLED from the conclave of Southern Conference coaches and officials at the Mayflower Hotel the past three days:

Guy Lombardo may play the sweetest music this side of heaven, but the North Carolina U. band undoubtedly supplies the most expensive . . . The Tar Heel music makers will accompany Charlie Justice & Co. to the Sugar Bowl at an expense of $15,000 . . . They've been alloted 6 minutes for their half-time serenading, which makes their music cost $2500 a minute . . . Athletic directors and football coaches may know their schedule-making and T-formation business, but they aren't too hep when it comes to parliamentary procedure. VPI's Sally Miles caught himself voting against a motion he had seconded at one of the conference's sessions . . . Duke, off the Maryland schedule this year, may return in 1950. It's in the works.

WHEN Clemson Coach Frank Howard received an offer of $35,000 to play Rice in Houston, he immediately accepted and quipped: "What a break for us. We may get beat, but we'll never get as much money for taking a licking" . . . Howard, incidentally, jostled Carolina's Carl Snavely when a newspaper photographer tried to pose them for pictures. Snavely wanted to get it over with in a hurry until Howard told him: "Don't act like a prima donna, Carl, after all I'm coach of the year, not you. And I did it without Charlie Justice" . . .

ONE OF the visiting firemen was Coach Scrappy Moore of Chattanooga U., who wowed an audience by repeating one of his half-time pep talks: "We were losing, 12-0, at half," he said, "and I told the boys: 'Listen, if you lugs don't go out there and win this ball game I'll have to go to work for a living.' Well, I'm still not job-hunting."

Benefit Game Today for Ed Tawney

A broken back could hardly be considered a lucky break, but it has gained Eddie Tawney of Washington a big league baseball tryout.

Eddie's the lad who broke his back in a Metro Amateur Football League game early in October, and who is the beneficiary of a charity doubleheader grid program this afternoon.

When President Clark Griffith of the Nats learned of the purpose of the games, he donated the use of the ball park.

Griff was informed that Eddie, a shortstop, has received tryout offers from the Dodgers and Athletics. Not one to let a good prospect get away, Griff told Eddie to get well quickly so that he can try out with the Nats first this spring.

Car Credit and Irish War Veterans meet in the first game of the doubleheader at 12:30 p. m. and Southwest meets Brookland-Woodridge at 2 p. m. All four teams were members of the Metro League.

The Touchdown Club has already donated $300 to the fund to help Tawney pay his hospital expenses. Tickets are priced at $1.

C. U. Loses To Roanoke

Roanoke, Va., Dec. 11.—Catholic University suffered its first loss in four starts as Roanoke College whipped the Cardinals, 51-38, here tonight.

The Cards were behind, 23-20, at the half, and never caught up. Roanoke pulled away in the last five minutes, with Tony Proietti setting the pace. Proietti's 11 points were tops for Roanoke.

It was the third straight Mason-Dixon Conference win for Roanoke, which has lost one non-league game. Jim Lefty, 6-foot 6-inch forward was high scorer for Catholic U. with 12 points.

At Oklahoma City

Vosmik Pilots Texas League Club in '49

Chicago, Dec. 11 (AP).—Joe Vosmik, former star outfielder with the Cleveland Indians, today was named manager of the Indians' Oklahoma City farm team in the Texas League, succeeding Pat Ankenman.

Vosmik led the Dayton, Ohio, club of the Central League last season. He began his managerial career in 1947 by piloting Cleveland's Tucson farm club to an Arizona-Texas League championship.

Turf Writers Award Goes to George Widener

New York, Dec. 11 (AP).—George D. Widener, president of Belmont Park, and Marshall Cassidy, executive secretary of the Jockey Club, today were named co-winners of the New York Turf Writers' Association award for 1948. It goes annually to the individual designated by the writers as having "done the most for racing."

Belloise, Frenchman Fight in Garden Jan. 7

New York, Dec. 11 (AP).—Steve Belloise of New York today agreed to meet Robert Villenain of Paris, French middleweight, in the 10-round main event of the January 7 boxing card at Madison Square Garden. Belloise replaces Jake La Motta, hurt in training last week.

Milwaukee Brewers Purchase Nick Etten

Milwaukee, Dec. 11 (AP).—The Milwaukee Brewers of the American Association today announced the purchase of First Baseman Nick Etten from Oakland of the Pacific Coast League.

Jake Flowers, Brewer president, did not disclose the purchase price, but it was reported to be approximately $12,500. Etten batted .313, hit 43 home runs and drove in 155 runs for the Oaks last season.

Bowling . . .

Bob Reid and Billy Towles, two outstanding young District bowlers, will defend their title in the annual Men's Brookland Limited Doubles duckpin championship at the Brookland Bowling Center today. Combined average for participants is 235. First prize will be $150 for the five-game event.

Over at Hyattsville, hospitalized soldiers will benefit from a handicap tournament, starting at 2 p. m. This will be five games, first prize being $50.00. The scratch is 128 and handicap three-fifths. Entrance fee is $3.00.

Hap Newman, Chevy Chase Ice Palace manager, is heading the bowling committee to aid in the annual infantile paraylsis campaign. Newman's early plans include a special benefit match at Ice Palace, January 8, between the Tom's Auto Service of the Men's Major District League and Jack White's Connecticut All Stars.

Kenny Beck, with a 114.18 average, bowling with the Arrow Beer team, is topping the Bethesda Bowling Center 540 League in individual averages. . . . Fred and Harrs is leading with 24 wins and 15 defeats . . . A 418 by Dave Singer, rolling with the Mitchel's Sport Shop, was tops in the Hebrew League at Penn Recreation.

One-ball tournaments are slated today at Petworth and Mount Rainier, starting at 2 p. m. Manager Eddie Goldberg announced that no more two-ball, ten-strike tournaments will be held at Clarendon until after the first of the year.

Skaaland, Savoldi Clash at Uline's

Arnold Skaaland meets Angelo Savoldi of New York in the feature bout in tomorrow night's wrestling at Uline Arena.

In the semifinal, Jim Wallis and Frank Hewitt meet Steve Gob and Rocco Columbo in a two-man team match.

Big Elm Second Two Lengths Back

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Charles Town, W. Va., Dec. 11.—A. S. Hammond's Count Display, unable to get to the front in any of his recent races, took the lead at the start today and ran off with the Bolivar Heights purse, featuring the second Saturday program of the meeting.

With Apprentice Peter Sheridan doing the booting, the 3-year-old son of Reigh Count finished two lengths in advance of Flamingo Farm's Big Elm. A neck farther back came William Irvine jr.'s Cuban Bill to be third in the field of eight.

With J. N. Fishback's Sister Leona a disappointing and out of the money favorite, Count Display paid $8.80 and was clocked in 1.28 4-5 for the about 7 furlongs over the improved racing surface.

A banner crowd of 8000—the Washington race special train brought 13 coaches—saw the program begin under a bright sky and end with the clouds closing in. The fans were in a betting mood and sent upwards of $400,000 in the tote.

The running of the feature proved a "chase Count Display" affair. There simply was not a catcher in the crowd. Sheridan saved ground with the Brown colt and kept him going in excellent style in the all-important stretch drive.

Cuban Bill made a mild bid leaving the backstretch but weakened as a result of this effort and lost the place to the tardy charge, along the inside rail of Big Elm.

The feature victory was the second of the day for young Sheridan who opened the program with a winning effort aboard Mrs. M. Paul's Dark Buckle, a $12.80 shot. The second race went to Teaville Farms' She's Scotch, piloted by the alert apprentice F. D. Rivera. She's Scotch was a $4.20 favorite and put the finishing touches on a $54.80 daily double pay-off. The winning combination was 1 and 8.

Blessed Sacrament Takes CYO Girls Basketball Lead

Blessed Sacrament ran its winning streak to five games, and took over first place in the Catholic Youth Organization's Division 1, Girls' Basketball League with a 17-11 victory over St. Martin's yesterday at St. Martin's gym.

Standouts for Blessed Sacrament were Jocelyn Loring and Arlyne Janaske who tallied eight and seven points. In other Division 1 games at St. Martin's, Nativity defeated Sacred Heart, 24-17, St. Jerome's trimmed St. Francis de Sales, 26-11, and St. Anthony's and St. Gabriel's played to a 24-24 tie.

In the girls' Division 2 loop, St. Joseph's nosed out St. Cecilia's, 20-19, although St. Cecilia's Merle Smith tallied 17 points. Other Division 2 games saw St. Peter's whip St. Theresa's, 22-13, St. Francis Xavier wallop St. Thomas, 12-2, and St. Michael's beat St. Dominic's, 29-23. All Division 2 games were played at St. Patrick's.

Unbeaten Cornell Trips Colgate Before 8500

Ithaca, N. Y., Dec. 11 (AP).—Cornell upset previously unbeaten Colgate, 57-48, tonight before a record Ithaca basketball crowd of 8500. The victory was the third in a row for unbeaten Cornell which has its private "Big Three" feud with Colgate and Syracuse.

Minneapolis Picked

Atlantic City, N. J., Dec. 11 (U.P.).—The Amateur Hockey Association tonight awarded the 1948-49 National championships to Minneapolis.

Bargain Fight Card Monday At Turner's

Tomorrow is bargain night again at Turner's Arena.

Matchmaker Gabe Menendez, full of the Christmas spirit, has assembled a card topped by four eight-rounders, with two local favorites heading the cast.

Lightweight Herbie Jones, absent from the W street ring for months, returns against Freddie Smith, speedy little stablemate of Ray Robinson. The other feature pits clever Jommy Cooper, another local product, against Tim Healy, New York featherweight.

In the other eight-rounders, Holly Mims and Garland Edwards, local middleweights, meet again, with Mims trying to erase a previous defeat by Edwards, and Red Gaddis and Burt Wicks, Washingtonans.

Gaddis dropped a split decision to Wicks in a sizzling contest two weeks ago.

Ellis Triumphs In Table Tennis

Top-seeded Mike Ellis entered the semi-finals of the men's singles of the Government employes' table tennis tournament by defeating Bill Sharin, 21-18, 19-21 and 21-9 yesterday at the District table tennis courts.

In other matches James Verta, seeded No. 3, defeated Arthur Seguso, 22-20, 21-15; Maj. Henry Heinichen defeated Gerald Cooley, 21-15 and 21-14, and Gerald Cumby defeated James Klemann, 15-21, 21-7 and 21-16, in the men's singles.

'Truman Bowl' Game Is Off

The "Truman Bowl," never officially on, is now officially off.

Al Lockhart, head of a local group which proposed to stage a January 1 game between pro all-stars and college seniors, last night said his committee had discarded the idea for the year.

Lockhart said his group would be back next year—January 1, 1950—with a new bowl, the AMVET Bowl, to be sponsored by the AMVETS National Service Foundation.

They're All Unbeaten

Four Kid Teams Play In Santa Claus Bowl Today

Philadelphia, Dec. 11 (AP).—Four unbeaten football teams with the oldest player not more than 13 years and the heaviest not over 105 pounds meet in the Santa Claus Bowl here next Saturday.

The bowl, inaugurated last year in 16 inches of snow by the Pop Warner Conference of Philadelphia, will bring together midget elevens from Omaha, Nebr., Lnychburg, Va., Durham, N. C., and Philadelphia.

The Durham Civics and the Lynchburg Mighty Mites will bring unbeaten, untied records into the competition. Frank Palumbo's Clickets of Philadelphia and the Roberts' Purepaks of Omaha each have been tied once. The Clickets defeated Frank Sinatra's team of New York

Big 9 Puts Limit on Aid to Athletes

Grades Count In Awarding Scholarships

Chicago, Dec. 11 (AP).—The Big Nine today deferred action on Michigan State College's application for membership until tomorrow, but approved a new scholarship code fixing limits on financial aid to athletes.

The scholarship restriction previously had been submitted to the member schools, but failed to receive unanimous approval within a 60-day period as required by the league constitution.

The scholarship program approved by the faculty representatives permits financial aid for tuition to needy athletes who maintain a "C" average scholastically, or a maximum of $300 annually beyond tuition to eligible athletes who maintain a "B" average.

The tuition aid on the basis of need may be granted to freshmen in the upper 50 per cent of their high school classes. The larger scholaship aid is for first-year students in the upper 25 per cent of their prep classes.

Frank E. Richart of Illinois, secretary of the faculty committee, disclosed that the Michigan State issue was No. 1 on his group's agenda today. The faculty members, however, expressed a desire to confer with their athletic directors before making a decision.

Hamilton at Meeting

Both Michigan State and Pittsburgh have had membership bids formally filed since spring of 1946.

Attending the weekend conference session from Michigan State were Lloyd C. Emmons, chairman of the Spartan Athletic Council, and Athletic Director Ralph Young.

Pittsburgh's contingent included new Athletic Director Tom Hamilton; Frank Carver, acting athletic director, and Vincent Lamfear of the school's athletic committee.

Commissioner K. L. (Tug) Wilson of the Big Nine explained, however, that the Pittsburgh delegation was invited simply to "acquaint" the new Pitt athletic administration with Big Nine officials. Pitt has tackled a number of Big Nine football teams in recent years.

Big Six Decides to Hire Commissioner; Eastern Colleges Restrict Summer Baseball

New York, Dec. 11 (AP).—The Eastern College Athletic Conference accepted 17 new members today, voted to return to its prewar eligibility rules and strengthened its stand against summer baseball.

The new members increased the cumbersome circuit to 76 colleges, stretching from Maine as far south as North Carolina and westward through Pennsylvania.

The group also went beyond the national colligiate sanity code in a drive against remuneration, such as tuition and fees, for student athletes.

It was customary until last spring for many Eastern college athletes to obtain jobs as dishwashers and waiters at New England resorts. Baseball teams then would be formed, representing cities or hotels, and league schedules were played.

This was virtually stopped last summer and Gov. Ernest W. Gibson of Vermont made a personal appearance before the ECAC yesterday asking that athletes again be permitted to play. Instead, the ECAC voted to make it more difficult to obtain permission.

The television committee asked that no ECAC school sign a television contract until the NCAA completed a survey now in progress.

The new members admitted today are: Brooklyn Poly Tech, Springfield, Haverford, Newark College, City College of New York, Siena, St. Lawrence, St. Mchael's of Vermont, University of Buffalo, Cortland, N. Y., State Teachers, Hamilton, St. Bonaventure, Albright, Upsala, Lehigh, Lafayette and Wagner.

Cards, Bears Play for Title

Philadelphia for the league championship, 28-21.

On paper, the Cardinals ostensibly boast better running backs—Charley Trippi, Elmger, Angsman and Pat Harder, but the Bears appear to have deeper line strength.

In average game play, the Cardinals hold a 399-to-356 yard total gain advantage. The Cardinal passing attack, revolving around Paul Christman and Ray Mallouf, has produced an average gain of 215, compared with the 144 tossed by the Bears' Sid Luckman, Johnny Lujack and Bobby Layne.

In their 10 league victories, the Cardinals rolled up 371 points while the Bears scored 354 in their 10 wins.

This will be the fifty-fifth meeting of the Chicago rivals. The Bears have won 36, lost 12 and tied 6, but the Cards have won three of the last four games, a turnabout directly caused by the free-spending of the late Cardinal Owner Charley Bidwill.

Navy Whips Harvard, 45-33

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 11 (AP).—Navy outfought Harvard, 45 to 33, today for its second straight basketball victory.

Captain John Barrow led the Midshipmen with 11 points, while Skyscraper Bill Prior racked up 12 for the losers.

Navy led all the way and had little difficulty maintaining the 9-point lead it held at the half.

Southwest Votes Against Expansion

Dallas, Dec. 11 (AP).—The Southwest Conference today slammed the door to expansion at least for a period of three years.

Texas Tech, Hardin-Simmons and University of Houston had made application for membership. Tech and Hardin-Simmons are in the Border Conference and University of Houston is in the Lone Star Conference.

Knicks Edge Bullets, 72-71

New York, Dec. 11 (AP).—Capt. John Palmer's jump shot with 22 seconds remaining gave the New York Knickerbockers a 72-71 Basketball Association of America victory over the Baltimore Bullets today before 11,352 at Madison Square Garden.

The triumph, their third over the Maryland quintet this season, was the New Yorkers' fourth straight and eighth in their last nine starts.

Palmer's winning goal offset a brilliant scoring effort by Baltimore's John Pelkington. The former Fort Wayne cager tallied 16 points in the second half and had the crowd howling with his assorted hook shots.

Carl Braun paced the Knicks' attack with 22 points, while Palmer hit for 16. Pelkington led the Bullet marksmen with 21.

Merrick Wins In Two Divisions

The Merrick Boys Club football team won the Boys Club of Washington championship in two divisions and stayed in the running in a third as a result of league play yesterday at the Ellipse.

In the 80-pound class they downed Alexandria, 18-0, to win the crown in that division. The 120-pounders kept their title hopes alive by trouncing Eastern, 30-0.

The Merrick 140-pounders won their class title by licking Eastern, 18-0. Tommy McCann paced the winners by scoring two touchdowns.

Syracuse Beats Quantico, 64-50

Syracuse, N. Y., Dec. 11 (AP).—Syracuse University's Orangemen defeated the Quantico Marines basketball team handily here tonight, 64-50, as Coach Lew Andreas employed 18 cagers.

Jack Kiley paced Syracuse with 18 points, while Jack Robbins and Cy Waldrop, former Annapolis stars, dropped in 16 and 15.

Baltimore, Bills Play

but eight of them were completed for a net of 163 yards. Nearly half of this total was fashioned in a scoring toss to Lamar Davis. Ratterman had a rough afternoon, flinging 41 and completing 17 for 23 yards less than Tittle.

The running of Billy Hillenbrand, Bus Mertes and Stormy Pfhol produced 140 yards for the Colts, only 15 less than the more vaunted Buffalo rushing attack.

Baltimore has made a particularly long climb to the playoff spot. Last year, the city's first in pro football, the club wound up in the divisional cellar with only two victories. A victory for Buffalo would give the Bills their first title, too.

ruled wide by Referee Halloran and costing the 'Skins a 9-7 beating, came in 1939.

In 1942 the Giants were held to a single yard running by the Redskins, didn't make a first down, but wound up with a 14-7 victory as Tuffy Leemans starred. In a second game Washington was inside the New York 20-yard line six times before getting its first score on Andy Farkas' 94-yard dash with the second-half kickoff.

Another voided field goal cost the 'Skins a 16-13 loss in '44, Joe Aguirre's second attempt falling just short.

In '46 the rivalry was featured by Steve Bagarus' pair of touchdowns on Baugh passes, and last year Baugh himself provided the excitement when he splurged over for two scores that gave Washington a 28-20 margin.

Compton Wins Little Rose Bowl

Pasadena, Calif., Dec. 11 (AP).—Compton College of California, displaying superiority in nearly every department, outclassed Duluth, Minn., Junior College, 48-14, in the third annual Little Rose Bowl games before 50,638 fans today.

Compton, chalking up its twelfth triumph of the season and its second win in as many tries in this junior college intersectional series, got off to a 20-point lead in the first quarter and was never threatened in the one-sided affair.

The undermanned Duluth Bluejays, outweighed on an average of 10 or more pounds per man, cashed in on a fumble and a penalty to score in the second quarter, and added another touchdown in the last period when Halfback Ralph Neuses intercepted a pass and ran it back 64 yards.

Compton trotted some 53 players onto the scene, which is about half the total enrollment of the Duluth school.

Two speedy backs, Bill Fell and Hugh McElhenny, all but wrecked Duluth in the first half. Fell, after the Duluth surprise first tally, took the kickoff and returned it 84 yards for 6 points. McElhenny consistently ripped off gains of 15 yards and better. He and Fell each scored two touchdowns.

Yanks Triumph In Silver Bowl

Mexico City, Dec. 11 (AP).—Trailing until the last quarter, the United States Pacific Area Fleet champs defeated an All-Star Mexican team, 33-26, to win the second annual Silver Bowl football game.

The Mexican All-Stars licked Randolph Field, 24-19, in the Silver Bowl game last year.

The Navy team was composed of players from the destroyer forces in the Pacific and the Hawaiian All-Stars.

Hardin-Simmons Ties Pacific, 35-35

Lodi, Calif., Dec. 11 (AP).—In a display of razzle-dazzle football, the College of Pacific and Hardin-Simmons University fought to a 35-35 standoff in the second annual Grape Bowl football game here today.

College of Pacific, behind 21-0 at the half, surged back for five second-half scores and was on the 1-foot line when the game ended.

Eddie LeBaron's passing and ball handling sparked the C. O. P. attack, and Halfback Don Hardy put on a brilliant running display. Hardy went for three scores on handsoff from LeBaron.

For the Cowboys, "Hooks" Davis romped for two touchdowns and John Ford tossed to End Bob McChesney for three.

College of Pacific went ahead, 35 to 28, in the fourth quarter when Hardy worked the second of a pair of touchdown-producing spinners. Following a 50-yard punt return by Davis to Pacific's 20, the Cowboys went the remaining distance, scoring on a pass from Ford to McChesney in the end zone, good for four yards. There were only 55 seconds to play when Paul Bailey kicked the tying point.

G. W. Schedules 9 Grid Games

George Washington University's football team will play nine games next year, one less than in 1948, G. W. Director of Athletics Max Farrington announced yesterday.

Dropped from the list of opponents is Wake Forest, while Washington and Lee replaces The Citadel. The Colonials will play their first four games on the road, although the V. M. I. game on October 1 may be played in Alexandria as part of that town's bicentenial celebration.

The Maryland game, scheduled for Griffith Stadium, may be moved to the Terps' stadium if the new bowl is finished in time. W. & L., Lafayette and Georgetown will meet G. W. at the Nats' ball park. Negotiations are also under way to move the Duke game, slated for Durham, to Griffith Stadium.

September 24—At Virginia.
October 1—At Virginia Military Institute; 8—At Kansas; 15—At Virginia Tech; 22—Washington and Lee at Griffith Stadium; 29—Lafayette at Griffith Stadium.
November 5—Maryland at Griffith Stadium; 12—At Duke; 19—Georgetown at Griffith Stadium.

15,000 Attracted to Santa Heim . . .

TURN OUT TO SEE SANTA—Part of the crowd of 15,000 who went yesterday to see Santa at the opening of "Santa Heim," Savage, Md., view St. Nick as he hears a small boy, held by AP Reporter George Bewen. 15,000 Take Part in Opening Of Santa's 'All-Year Home'

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

Savage, Md., Dec. 11.—A jolly Santa Claus, aided by 15,000 constituents, officially opened Santa Heim here as his "year-round home."

Harry H. Heim, 64-year-old Christmas tree ball tycoon, initiated the scheme of buying this small Maryland town of 1200 and converting it into a drawing card for tourists.

Two trains chartered by Heim carried 2000 youngsters and parents from Union Station to here. They were joined by a trainful from Baltimore—another thousand. In addition, an estimated 5000 cars unloaded others to join the excited crowds who surged through this village. The parking fee was 25 cents a car.

Santa deserted his traditional sleigh and reindeer in favor of a flashy open sedan, where he sat waving to the toddlers and teenagers who surged around. Heim was alongside with his 7-year-old grandson, Jay Ellis, of San Diego, Calif.

Also in the motorcade were five real Barnum & Bailey circus clowns who made a brief appearance, a small band, two cars of 1904 and 1911 vintage and cars full of various county, State and Federal officials.

It was not an easy day for the parents. Many tried, often in vain, to take photographs in the milling crowds with their youngsters posed against the large wooden cutouts of nursery rhyme figures set up in the town's center. Others merely tried to exert the usual parental caution against overpurchasing of such holiday necessities as hot dogs, soda, candy and fancy souvenirs.

Eager children, tugging at their parents, yanked them toward a large tent housing motorized plaster animals such as a giant elephant, a towering giraffe and other unusual zoo occupants. Admissions were 18 cents each. Then it was for a ride on the tiny train which puffed around a short track at 18 cents a ride, or for a free look at the eight live reindeer penned in a huge stockade.

After that, they joined the steady lines worming their way into the community hall which now houses long shelves crowded with toys. The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad sent down a "Tom Thumb" replica of its first train, but the exhibit broke down under the press of would-be passengers.

The final stop for all was a visit to the sprawling cotton duck mill now converted into a Christmas ornament plant for Heim's firm, Santa Novelties, Inc., producers of three fifths of the Nation's needs for the tree decorations. There visitors watched a skilled glassblower, George Dorsey of Baltimore, show how such ornaments are made.

A few brief speeches launched the community as "Santa's home." Among those who spoke were Gov. William Preston Lane and Representative Lansdale Sasscer (D., Md.). Lane congratulated Heim establishing a permanent home for Santa Claus "right here in Maryland."

Heim thanked the crowds for coming out and emphasized that the attractions were "only a start." He promised that by next Christmas, the town would offer a two or three ring live circus, streets lined with animals and beautiful decorations throughout.

Not everyone was satisfied, however. One District woman who took a group of kiddies to Santa Heim came back last night and told The Washington Post this was "the first time in her life she felt like shooting Santa Claus."

The woman complained the project was strictly a "commercial money-making scheme.

"It was nothing different from a country fair, except on a bigger scale," she declared.

Bribery Suspect Documents Yield Yoshida Receipt

Tokyo, ec. 11 (AP).—The Tokyo procurator's office reported today it had found a receipt for one million yen (about $3700) signed by Premier Shigeru Yoshida among the papers of a bribery suspect.

The receipt was in the effect of Kiyoshi Umemura, a textile magnate under arrest on suspicion of bribery to influence textile allocations. There was no comment from Yoshida.

Jiro Hoshijima, former Commerce Minister, told reporters that he, Hoshijima, had used the money for legitimate campaign expenditures. He said he had induced Yoshida to sign the receipt for Umemura.

Umemura said he had contributed to political campaigns but denied any bribery.

Hitoshi Ashida, Yoshida's rival and predecessor as Premier, is under arrest on a bribery charge. His cabinet fell October 6 after two former members were involved in the investigation of a 10-million-dollar government loan to the Showa Denko Fertilizer Co.

Ashida himself is charged with accepting a bribe from a contractor while Premier. He declared he received legitimate campaign contributions, but denied any bribery.

British Use Mock A-Bomb In Maneuvers

London, Dec. 11 (AP).—Does Britain have an atom bomb of her own? Has she borrowed some from the United States? Or is she merely engaged in the atomic equivalent of playing with wooden guns?

These questions were underscored this week when the sea and air forces tried to find out if an enemy task force could approach to within striking distance of England's shores despite aerial defenses.

It did.

The weather—consistenly bad—helped the navy and hindered the air force. So did the strategy of the old salts who command the home fleet representing the potential enemy.

The maneuvers ended tonight when the big guns of the invading fleet "bombarded" Plymouth.

Not until the fleet was about 200 miles south of England—well within striking distance range for its carrier planes—was the RAF able to locate and attack the invading force.

And then only a single plane got through to attack either a heavy cruiser or the battleship Duke of York.

It dropped a mock atom bomb—widely heralded in advance by the Air Ministry as the method by which an enemy's seaborne advance might be halted. The bomb actually was a bundle of three flares with a total of more than nine million candlepower. The admiralty said it fell 2 miles from the target and was dropped from a suicide level of 1500 feet.

The lone attacking plane was one of more than two score bombers participating. On paper, at least, this meant that in such weather each one of the planes would have to carry an atom bomb.

Nothing emerged to show whether Britain has developed an atomic bomb of her own, whether she borrowed some from the United States for possible emergencies, or whether she thinks she might borrow some.

ADA Would Expel States' Rights Group

New York, Dec. 11 (AP).—Americans for Democratic Action today urged expulsion of States' Rights Democrats from the Democratic Party caucuses of both House and Senate and their removal from all important Congressional committee posts.

The ADA statement also called on the Democratic leadership to name liberals to all committee vacancies, reach agreement on a plan to end Senate filibusters and limit, by legislation, the power of the House Rules Committee.

Mrs. Roosevelt Flying Home

Paris, Dec. 11 (AP).—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt plans to devote the rest of her active life to the United Nations as "the best hope we have for peace."

"We may slide into war," she said today, "but we must support the U. N. It may yet save civilization from the terrible setback of another war."

Mrs. Roosevelt will leave by plane for New York at 2:10 a. m. Sunday after three hard-working months at the U. N. Assembly in Paris. Other United States delegates will take the slower way home—by boat.

She will spend the Christmas holidays with members of her family in New York and at Hyde Park, then plunge into more work at U. N. headquarters at Lake Success.

Mrs. Roosevelt is chairman of the U. N.'s 18-nation Human Rights Commission, which will seek next year to draft a human rights treaty legally enforcing those rights.

She has no other plans. She said, "I don't want to live in Washington."

U. S. Jap Hold Seen Periled

New York, Dec. 11 (AP). — The New York Times says Gen. Douglas MacArthur views the United States' position in Japan as being "weakened materially" by Communist advances in Asia.

The Times, in a dispatch from Washington by Hanson W. Baldwin, said MacArthur, supreme commander of the Allied Powers in Japan, has forwarded an estimate of the effects of the Communist victories upon his position.

This document, the Times said, was being studied in Washington during the past week.

"In essence," Baldwin wrote, General MacArthur views the United States position in Japan as weakened materially by the flanking Communist positions in the north on the Kuriles and Kamchatka and Sakhalin, and in the south in China."

"Additional troops, ships and planes are needed if our position in Japan and the Ryukyus to the south is to be secure, his analysis states," the article added.

"Apparently General MacArthur does not feel that much, if anything, can now be done to arrest the sweep of communism in China," Baldwin said.

Argentina Pact, ERP Cut Italy's Basic Food Costs

Rome, Dec. 11 (AP).—Italy's basic foods—bread and spaghetti—will be cheapter, thanks to the European Recovery Program and recent agreements with Argentina.

A cabinet announcement said today that owing to economies made "on the prices of imported wheat," the prices of bread and spaghetti will be lowered.

Bread will cost 111 lire (18.8 cents) per kilogram (two pounds, three ounces) instead of 112 lire (19 cents.)

The price of spaghetti will be cut 4.50 lire, costing 130.5 lire (22 cents) per kilogram.

Vittorio Ronchi, food commissioner, said "the quality of bread will be the same as before the war, 1938."

Customers Hurl Groceries at Man Stealing $1980

Portsmouth, Ohio, Dec. 11 (AP).—Scores of customers in a busy supermarket threw canned goods and vegetables at a lone robber tonight as he fled with $1980.

The man was captured by four policemen after a chase over downtown streets. Police identified him as George William Kimmell, 48, formerly of Youngstown, Ohio.

The robber entered the market when it was packed with customers. He fired a shot into the ceiling, cleaned out the cash registers and started to back out of the store. Then the customers rallied.

Canned goods of every description, along with a few cabbages and bottles, were thrown from all corners of the store. Some of them missed their mark and broke windows.

The bandit tried to flee in an automobile. There he got another surprise.

L. R. Gable, a customer, had slipped out of the store and removed the keys.

The robber fled on foot, but police took up the chase.

The money was recovered.

Guard Cutter Saves 10 Aboard Disabled Ship

Muskegon, Mich., Dec. 11 (AP).—A sturdy Coast Guard cutter won a hairbreadth race against time tonight to save a stricken Naval Reserve ship and its crew of 10.

Knifing through an icy gale on Lake Michigan, the cutter Woodbine took the USS Brant in tow before waves could dash the disabled craft onto Michigan's darkened coast.

It was a nip and tuck rescue operation. The wallowing Brant, training ship for the Muskegon Naval Reserve, was less than a mile from the beach and drifting in fast when the Woodbine appeared.

Working fast, Coast Guards tossed a line aboard the vessel and took her in tow toward safe harbor in Muskegon.

YANKEE DON'T LIKE VA.
HILLWOOD

On November 28, we sold one of the most outstanding homes in beautiful "Hillwood" to a Washington merchant who comes from New England.

On December 1, he moved in. On December 3, he moved out.

He didn't like Virginia! To prove it he is willing to take a substantial loss for the 7 days he lived in the house.

This home is suitable for an executive, member of Congress, or anyone else who must have ample room for entertaining.

The construction is of brick and stone and is nestled under large oaks on a quiet street. The recreation room is out of this world with complete bar and fireplace.

First floor consists of a lovely living room, large dining room, very large, beautifully equipped kitchen, bedroom and bath. The 2nd floor has 2 large bedrooms and 2 baths (one with sliding glass-door shower).

There is a 1st trust of $17,500 at 4½% amortizing at the rate of $133.88. A cash payment of $15,000 will be required. You've been waiting for a bargain, this is it.

Picked a Pumpkin

As a Naturalist, Editor Should Know That Secret Would Come Out in Time

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

What motivated paunching Luceditor Whittaker Chambers to hide his spoil in a pumpkin? (Which the dictionary describes unglamorously as "A kind of gourd used especially in pies and as cattle food.") Why did he choose such complicated concealment? Is he by chance a frustrated Cinderella whose glittering coach-and-four never materialized, but remained irrevocably pumpkin? Answer to this $64 question, perhaps, lies in Chambers activities as translator, rather than those of Communist stooge. Nineteen years ago he translated from the German Felix Salten's "Bambi!" The library card describing this effort reads: "Bambi —a life in the woods. Deer legends and stories."

STILL ENRAPTURED with nature, the next year the recent senior editor of Time kept in the groove with Salten's "Fifteen Rabbits." He finished a Salten trilogy with "The City Jungle" ("Freunde aus aller Welt"). From 1928 to 1932 Chambers went to town with his German-English dictionary, translating such varied curiosa as Henrich Mann's "Mother Mary"; Kasimir Edschmid's "The Passionate Rebel, the Life of Lord Byron;" Anton Nodor's "Venetian Lover, the Romance of Giorgione"; Johannes Travlog's "Cards and Kings," a revamping of "Konig Neuhoff," a fantasy by an eighteenth century Baron Neuhof. In 1930 he skipped into French, doing Albert T'serstevens "The Sentimental Vagabond."

16-Year Lexicographical Lapse

FROM 1932 to 1948 Mr. C. deserted dictionary, possibly because Communist chores interfered or because editing paid better. But to his pastime of turning German into English, translating "The Scorpion" by Anna Elizabeth Weirauch. In 1931 daisy-chainers at Vassar (where Elizabeth Bentley had received her educational polishing), acted in a play by Hallie Flanagan and Margaret Ellen Clifford, based on a Chambers story plucked from the "New Masses" and intriguingly titled, "Can You Hear Their Voices?" The opus is described somewhat diffusedly as "A play of our time" (no pun intended). Only realistic bit translated (with Barrows Mussey) was Gustav Regler's "The Great Crusade"—which has nothing to do with Eisenhower, but is a history of the recent Spanish civil war.

IN ODD MOMENTS Whittaker Chambers has batted out some pretty snappy erotic jingles. This department's reprintable favorite was published in The Nation magazine back in 1925, was republished in an anthology. It's called "The Quag Hole." It commences and reasonably enough:

"He waited and, as he waited, grew less eager.
He had come first, believing he was anxious.
The quag lay buried in the darkness at his feet
The village lights shone far between and meager.

Eventually his girl friend turns up at the quag (what a spot for romantic rendezvous!) but our hero gets cold feet and remained ungallantly spying on her from the bushes. The saga ends on a somewhat conceited note of frustration.

"He never stirred.
But watched how credulously, hour by hour,
she stood
And when at last the longing woman went,

Moving This Week

Mrs. Mesta to Entertain At Uplands Next Year

Bq Marie McNair

WASHINGTON'S NO. 1 HOSTESS, Mrs. George Mesta will entertain this winter at 1500 Foxhall rd. instead of an apartment at the Shoreham which she leased earlier in the season.

Here from Newport and at the moment at the Mayflower, Perle will be moving into her new residence early this week.

When it was owned by Mrs. Borden Harriman, she called her house Uplands, presumably because of its location on a rise in the road and its enchanting view of Washington. Prince and Princess Guido Pignatelli once occupied the house and Sir John Balfour lived in it when he was British Minister. Not long ago, Mrs. Harriman bought a Georgetown house, sold Uplands to James Ryan, whose sister, Elinor is Mrs. Parke Brady, and with Captain Brady lives close by at 1800 Foxhall rd.

Mrs. Mesta has taken the house furnished with a lease until July 1. She'll go back to Newport for Christmas and will bring some of her own things from her house there when she returns. Meanwhile she's working like two beavers for the inaugural ball.

Mme. Nehru Turns Magazine Writer

MME. NEHRU, wife of the Indian Minister, who's soon to bid Washington farewell, will be speaking to her friends next month through the pages of Vogue.

Typical of India's modern woman, Rajan Nehru is keenly intelligent, thoroughly conversant on world affairs and still is appealingly feminine. Those seemingly shapeless stretches of material called saris, which Indian ladies wrap themselves in and then carelessly toss an end over a shoulder, aren't quite as simple as they look, Mme. Nehru explained to a group at luncheon the other day.

THE NEW LOOK has infiltrated Indian fashions, says Mme. Nehru, and brighter colors, narrower borders are in vogue. As for herself, she clings to some of the old, more sombre tones, but accepts the trend and can look as gay as a butterfly when she wishes.

The Nehrus will give a farewell cocktail party on Friday, December 17, and shortly after that will sail for Europe and Sweden, where Mr. Nehru will be his country's top diplomatic representative in Stockholm.

POSING PRETTILY in pre-Christmas editions is Mme. de Kauffmann, handsome wife of the Danish Ambassador, in the Ladies Home Journal, wearing a shimmering hostess gown of pale ivory satin dripping in lace, with a red lacquer Chinese chest in the background.

Date Book Data:

WILLIAM FAHNESTOCK and his wife, the former Eppes Hawes, daughter of Mrs. Harry Hawes and the late Senator, do a series for Vogue at their Maryland estate's skeet shoot. And the Morris Cafritzes in Paris dining with Schiaparelli in her abandoned air raid shelter, from Femina magazine, French counterpart of Harper's Bazaar.

Town Topics:

Something new in fashions has been created by the Designer Schiaparelli, is being worn in Washington by Gwendolyn Cafritz. It's detachable sleeves, of all things, making a dinner dress a ball gown in the twinkling of an eye.

Betty Tyson Lyeth, daughter of the George Tysons, who started a radio program in Providence, R. I., last summer called "Betty and the Kids," is on the way to becoming a national hook-up figure. Already a dozen stations are bidding for a spot.

Lieut. Gen. Elwood R. Quesada, who'll always be Pete to his old Washington pals, has taken Mrs. Matthew Finn's fine old red brick

Vocation Guidance Adviser Writes Job Guide for Girls

HOW DOES the subject you study in college translate itself into a job?

This is one of the subjects covered by Josephine C. Gerth in her new career book for high school seniors and college girls, "Highways to Jobs for Women," published by the Woman's Press.

In one section of her book, Mrs. Gerth breaks down various college subjects and translates them into jobs.

What eight jobs are available for a girl who has studied botany?

Agricultural economist, agronomist, biometrician, nature study counselor, plant breeder, plant pathologist, research worker, microscopist.

What five jobs are available for a zoology major?

Animal breeder, apiculturist, biologist, entomologist, technician.

What four jobs might a geography and geology student go after?

Technician, soil analyst, cartographer, survey soil worker.

If you study political science and sociology, what kind of job might you apply for?

Consular agent, journalist, industrial hygienist, social service worker, anthropologist.

If you study philosophy you might get a job as a religious educator or a social service worker.

If physical education is your forte, you might become a public recreation worker or a social worker.

Songstress Takes Bow At Embassy

Diplomatic Circling

By Elizabeth Maguire

A POPULAR international figure is about to appear simultaneously in every land. To some he's Santa, to others St. Nick. To the children of France, he's Father Noel, and to mothers and fathers he's a devastating expense.

As St. Nicolas, this popular person has already visited children in Holland. He appeared on his own birthday, December 5, riding a white horse and accompanied by his servant, Black Pieter. St. Nicolaas had a bag of gifts for children who were good, and Black Pieter brought a bag of switches for those who were bad. The journey to Holland is always made via Spain, and the naughtiest children are apt to be carried back to Spain in a bag.

No such catastrophe occurred to children who attended a party given last Monday by Dr. L. Soutendijk, Financial Counselor of the Netherlands Embassy. St. Nicolaas arrived in an open car, and Black Pieter wasn't even invited.

Children of the Spanish Embassy will not receive their gifts till after Christmas. January 6, traditionally the day the Three Wise Men presented gold, frankincense and myrrh to the Infant Jesus, is day of giving in Spain. And there is always a gala gathering at the embassy on that day for the young.

An interesting book on the Arabian Peninsula, written by Richard Sanger of the State Department, is expected out by spring. Mr. Sanger's book will be of great interest, dealing with background and history of the area, as well as American interests there. The book does not go into current topics.

The author is well-traveled in the Middle East. He was the eighth American to enter the Yeman, and he knows such remote spots as Bahrein, an oil island off the coast and one of the finest pearling centers in the world. He has also visited in Kuwait, which is an independent Sheikdom in the north of the Persian Gulf. Proportionately for its size, Kuwait is potentially the richest area in the world, and boasts about 100,000 inhabitants. Mr. Sanger's book will be illustrated with pictures taken by himself and others.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Sanger entertained at a small dinner last evening to say farewell to the Indian Minister and Mme. Nehru, who are leaving soon for Sweden, where the Minister will be in charge of the legation.

The new Military Attache at the British Embassy, Col. J. C. Windsor Lewis, and Mrs. Windsor Lewis have moved into Lower Ranleigh, near Gen. Sir William Morgan, who is at Ranleigh, McLean, Va. A third house on the place is owned by the Thacher Winslows, and this is for sale as the Winslows have just bought a house in Georgetown. During the recent election campaign, Herbert Brownell, jr., GOP campaign manager, lived at Lower Ranleigh. An interesting sidelight on the over-confidence of the Republicans, is the fact that the campaign manager asked for a short lease of three months.

The Danish Ambassador, Henrik de Kauffmann, will act as godfather at the christening on December 17 of the small daughter of

ERIC JOHNSTON (right), head of the Motion Picture Association of America, author of "We're All In It," a book on Europe as he sees it, was a guest at the reception with Mrs. Johnston (center). Here they are exchanging bon mots with Andre Kostelanetz, who came down to hear his wife's concert in Constitution Hall

Mary Haworth's Mail

Lad, 17, Is Disgusted With Elder Brother's Social Uplift Activities, Which He Centers In the Family Since Becoming a Policeman

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Five months ago my Brother Dan, 22, a college graduate, was appointed to the police force; and since then he is not only a cop on duty, but a cop at home, too. What a change! We had peace until then.

There are four of us younger than Dan. I am 17, Phil is 16, and we have twin sisters, 14. We have enjoyed our own way pretty much, but knowing that dad and mother trusted us, we never took advantage.

My sisters had been in the habit of wearing slacks and old shirts and joining in our games after school, but the family cop has changed all that. His sisters must be ladies! Only on special occasions should they wear slacks, and they fell for it. To me they have become two pains in the neck.

Balks at Helping Brother's "Brats"

ALSO DAN has become interested in boys' club work with several clergymen; and every week my mother and sisters serve buffet supper to a bunch of these brats, who would be more at home in a barn than a dining room; but we are supposed to glad-hand them. My mother and sisters think it's great and that Dan is just wonderful; but I think Dad feels as Phil and I do.

What gripes me most is that Dan expects us two younger boys to go places with him on our free evenings and befriend these brats. Why should we? We don't shirk any duties and feel that our free time is our own. We have no interest in such work and what right has he to boss us around?

We are sick of hearing him tell how one brat is clever at drawing, another at something else, and so on. All they need, he says, is the right people to guide them in youth; but Phil and I are going to tell him to go to hell (excuse the expression) the next time he tries to draft us for boys' club work. Don't you agree that he should mind his own business and that our free time is our own? R. F.

Lad Doesn't Know What's Eating Him

DEAR R. F.: The question is, what have you got against Dan, just on general principles? Did you ever try to figure it out? I daresay not.

In all probability what makes him insufferable from your viewpoint is the fact that he happens to be the big brother of the family and perhaps also the apple of his mother's eye; whereas you are five years behind him, and maybe not so brawny, self-confident, handsome, smart in school or socially enterprising.

At any rate, I'm sure you've always privately resentfully felt like a peewee compared to him, and doubtless always assumed that most people couldn't see you for dust when he was around.—and it's this sort of thing you've held against him, for which he isn't responsible.

Typical Younger Brother Outrage

AFTER ALL, he didn't arrange to be born first, nor choose his character, aptitudes and goals with deliberate intent to get your goat. From the time you arrived on the scene, he has just been going ahead, living his life in terms of his years, opportunities and temperament, and if you feel griped, as you trail in the wake of his head-start, can he help it? Certainly not.

What bothers you, too, is his casual treatment of your scrappy resentment; but that's the way of enterprising popular elder brothers; and it may console you to know that countless younger brothers spend their youth warring against the firstborn on much the same grounds, which makes no more sense than banging one's head against a wall. It's a terrific waste of energy.

Now, about the boys' club work: I think Dan's performance is wonderful, too, even though exceedingly zealous, as young crusaders are apt to be. But still I believe your parents should insist that you and Phil have the privilege of spending your free time as you please, so long as your leisure pursuits are honorable. If they want you to do as Dan says, just because he says so, they're wrong. But maybe they think you ought to help the poor and unfortunate, when possible, and are coaching him to drag you along, and letting him take the rap for their preference. For advice—try to see things in the round and don't concentrate so fiercely on Dan. M. H.

Diplomats' Children, Garbed In Native Dress, on Program

DRESSED in the colorful costumes of their countries, children of the Diplomatic Corps will send Christmas greetings around the world at the fourteenth annual International Children's Christmas Broadcast Sunday, December 19.

The program, sponsored by the Greater National Capital Committee, will last from 5 to 5:30 p.m. and will be followed by ice cream and cooking for the participants.

Originating in the Terrace Room of the Shoreham Hotel, the children's greetings in English and their native tongues will be short-waved abroad and carried in this country on the ABC radio network and the CBS East Coast television network. (WMAL and WMAL-TV in Washington.)

Alben Barkley Truitt, grandson and namesake of the Vice President-elect will represent the children of the United States on the broadcast. The son of Mr. and Mrs. Max O'Rell Truitt, "Bill" Truitt is a student at St. Albans School.

The Florists Telegraph Delivery Association will decorate the Terrace Room and wire floral Christmas greetings to an official of each foreign country represented on the program. The youngsters participating in the program select the officials and send personal messages along with the flowers.

Santa Claus and Carols

Presents for the children will be distributed by Santa Claus, and the youngsters will sing Christmas carols. The U. S. Marine Band Symphony Orchestra, directed by Maj. William F. Santelmann, will play a medley of seasonal music.

BRUSH 'N' HUM

makes brushing teeth fun for kiddies. And, it encourages the "good habit" of regular brushings. It sets up a merry time when tooth brush in left-hand slot is removed from holder, and keeps playing while teeth are being brushed and gums massaged. Adheres to wall by suction cup, or may be permanently fastened with miracle adhesive. Brush 'N' Hum will make a big hit with the kiddies. Without brushes. Mail orders prepaid 3.95

Design for Buffet

By Vivian Brown

ONE of the smartest ways to entertain is buffet style. The shortage of domestic help makes it easier for the lady of the house. She can prepare casseroles, salads and desserts well in advance, do the whole job with a minimum of fuss.

Especially how with the cost of foods skyrocketing, breakfast buffets are becoming more popular. You can invite as many people as you like, use gay Mexican or modern pottery, serve stick-to-the-ribs food at a pittance.

In her book, "Setting Your Table" (Barrows), Helen Sprackling says that these charmingly friendly, intimate buffet parties can have as much grace and form as a larger dinner. She advises that the service can be varied to suit the need, that two or three flowers can take the place of a dozen, that electric serving appliances can be put into play to keep an entire meal warm, if necessary.

Big and little wood bowls, cheese boards, trays, and plates can be used. Lots of color in pottery, glass, cloths and napkins will enhance the setting. She suggests, however, that the well-set buffet table should be a study in design as well as a picture of harmoniously blended color.

You can use your finest silver, crystal and linen, or make it less formal with place mats and kitchen cutlery.

The setting depends on the occasion, of course. Breakfast and supper parties or a New Year's Eve party, advises Miss Sprackling, can take even a red oil cloth covering. Fish net can be used as a cloth for a breakfast by the sea, lace mats for a buffet luncheon announcing an engagement. Plenty of tall candles lend enchantment to an evening party. But put your own imagination to work and you will come up with an exciting plan, no doubt.

If you have a copper chafing dish or a silver or pewter coffee urn, use them. Fill a big brandy glass with roses, a mahogany or other wooden bowl with salad, drag out pepper mills and grandma's old cruet. That's the fun of a buffet party—complete informality, family style.

Here are some further tips from Miss Sprackling on how to make your buffet party go off smoothly:

1. Don't attempt to serve too many people.
2. Avoid anything that requires knives; there must be nothing to cut or spread with butter.
3. Use tumblers or footed glassware.

ALICE WOODWARD BABCOCK, daughter of Mrs. Elizabeth T. Babcock, of Harkaway, Woodbury, Long Island, and Mr. Richard F. Babcock, of Locust Valley, was married to Stacy B. Lloyd, of Millwood, Va., son of Mrs. Thomas D. Thatcher of 920 Fifth avenue, New York, and of the late Stacy B. Lloyd, of Philadelphia, at Woodbury Methodist Church, at noon on last Sunday. The ceremony was performed by the pastor, the Reverend Roger Thompson and reception was held at Harkaway.

GIVEN IN MARRIAGE by her father, the bride wore a gown of off white satin, made with a round neckline, long sleeves and a full skirt terminating in a train. Her veil was of heirloom family lace and she carried a bouquet of white roses and bouvardia. The bride's sister, Anne Babcock, was flower girl. Mr. Morris Lloyd was best man for his brother. After a wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd will live in Mollwood.

Attended Madeira School

THE BRIDE attended the Madeira School in Greenway, Va., was graduated from the Brearley School, New York, in 1945 and studied also at Bryn Mawr College. She is a granddaughter of Mrs. Lewis S. Thompson of Brookdale Farm, Red Bank, N. J.; the late Colonel Thompson and the late Mr. and Mrs. Henry Denison Babback of New York. Mrs. Lloyd is an accomplished young horsewoman.

Mr. Lloyd was graduated from St. Paul's School in Concord, N. H., Massachusetts and Princeton Universities, where he was president of the Ivy Club. During the War he served in Italy and France with the Office of Strategic Services. The bridegroom is a member of the Racquet and Tennis Clubs of New York and of the Metropolitan Club of Washington.

THE WEDDING of Jonedith Henry Casilear and Lorenzo Custis Lewis was performed at 2 p. m. Saturday in the Loudoun Street Presbyterian Church in Winchester. The Rev. Ronald Wilson officiated. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Henry of Winchester and the groom is the son of Mrs. Robert H. Fiedler of Berryville, Va., and the late George N. Lewis. The church was decorated with white pompons and ferns. Mrs. Dorothy Tollotson offered a program of nuptial music.

Gown of Slipper Satin

THE BRIDE was attired in a gown of gray slipper satin with pink and gray accessories. She carried a bouquet of pale pink carnations and baby's-breath. Mrs. R. L. Ritter of Winchester was her sister's only attendant. She wore a bronze taffeta gown with black accessories and carried a bouquet of gardenias and baby's-breath. Mr. Marshall McCormick Reynolds of Berryville, was best man. After the ceremony a reception was given at the home of the bride's parents on Cecil st., for membership of the immediate families.

MRS. LEWIS was graduated from Handley High School and attended Fairfax Hall, in Waynesboro, Va. Mr. Lewis attended Washington and Lee University and was graduated from the University of Michigan, where he received a BS degree in forestry. He served four years in the Corps of Engineers, with 18 months overseas in the CBI theater. After a wedding trip the couple will live at Greystone Terrace.

Among out-of-town guests were the bridegroom's grandmother, Mrs. Sylvia K. von Beck of New York, his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. John Byram, and their daughter, Martha, of Rose Hill, S. C.

MR. AND MRS. JOHN LAWSON entertained at a dinner party last evening at the Middleburg Inn, in celebration of Mrs. Lawson's birthday.

MR. AND MRS. GEORGE ROBERT SLATER entertained a few evenings ago at a surprise birthday party in her honor at their home near Upperville.

Colorful Gifts for the Bedroom

Practical gifts for the bedroom and bath that have spark and drama colorwise are always welcome for they'll repeat their Merry Christmas message the year around.

Royal blue towels, a dusty rose bathroom rug or a pair of fluffy, emerald green blankets are excellent choices, says Better Homes and Gardens magazine.

Time was when linens were drab and uninteresting but now even sheets and pillow cases have gift appeal. You'll find towels, sheets, rugs and blankets of nearly every color in both pastels and bright shades.

SHEETS AND PILLOW CASES come with border designs that match reversible blankets. Monogrammed sheets look crisp and fresh turned down over colorful blankets.

Towel sets of different colors for each member of the family will settle the problems of whose towels are whose. Clear, bright colors like citron, gold and dark green blend easily with one another—and give a pastel-and-white bathroom a new lease on life.

The Gift Box

CHRISTMAS-GAY silk scarfs are almost too pretty to hide in conventional gift wrappings, so Glentex has put out a "Candlewick Scarf" which permits the scarf to show its colorful self through the partially transparent box, and also at the top where a perky corner gives the candlewick effect

AS cute a trick as a gal could hope to find in the toe of her seamless nylons is a lipstick and perfume atomizer combination. Very little larger than the lipstick alone would be, the etched case has a tiny atomizer nested under its lid. A Tangee product, it comes in seven delicious lipstick colors. It's inexpensive enough to make an extra gift, along with the piece de resistance you give your No. 1 honey, and attractive enough to stand alone as a gift for ladies further down on the list.

THIS gift will do equally well for a young lady or an old lady, but it's particularly good to bear in mind for those few darlings who aren't well acquainted with lipsticks or cigarette lighters, but who aren't in the market for rocking chairs, either. It's Ogilvie Sisters' hair care kit, which includes castile shampoo, wave-set lotion, creme set, scalp pomade and a choice of several other items to suit the particular head. A 36-page booklet, "The Secret of Lovely Hair," goes with the box.

FOR a tiny gift, why not get a key ring and attach to it a little sleigh bell or a miniature copper cowbell such as the ones on sale at Hecht's? That way, a girl just has to shake her purse when she leaves the house to be sure she has her key.

The bells make merry Christmas touches on top of any kind of gift box, too. Or give several of them to a high-school lassie—she'll put them on belt, shoe laces or coat lapel, or at the top of her stocking cap.

THE silk scarf has turned out to be an ideal gift for all the women on anybody's list. They start at a very low price for the lightweight ones, and work their way up to luxury prices in the heavier or handpainted varieties.

You needn't know a lady's size to buy her a big silk square, although you'd better know her color preference if you're planning to buy a very expensive one.

At a moderate price in a Christmas package are the Glentex "Candlewick" scarfs. The multicolored scarfs are tucked into partly transparent candle-shaped boxes with just a bit of corner protruding like a candlewick.

England Is Not So Merry, Now That Christmas Is Here

London, Dec. 11.—An "austerity" Santa Claus will greet the British people when they celebrate their ninth successive Christmas under rationing. With the exception of a tea bonus, extra Christmas rations are the lowest since the war ended, but there'll be more turkeys and toys available.

Aside from normal rations, housewives will get an extra half-pound of sugar, four ounces of tea (no extra last year) and two ounces of candy and chocolates. Unlike last year, Britons will get no meat bonus this Christmas, but shops will carry more tongue, sausages and meat pies.

One cheerful note is that more Britons than last year will be carving turkeys this Christmas Day. There will be 2000 tons more poultry in the shops than last Christmas. And there's a double ration of cooking fat to help housewives in their task of roasting the birds.

Trimmings Are Plentiful

BRITONS this year can look forward to a fairly plentiful supply of trimmings for the festive board. All kinds of jam and marmalade have now come off the ration.

Everyone will get a few oranges, and apples are being imported from Switzerland and other European countries to supplement the home supply, which is smaller than last year. There will be tangerines to fill the toes of most Christmas stockings, and apricots are coming from South Africa and nuts from Europe.

Plum puddings are "more scarce than last year," say the grocers. Registered customers are rationed to a one-pound pudding for two persons. Main reason for the shortage is lack of dried fruit. Housewives are unlikely to get more than one-quarter pound of currants and sultanas per ration book, but the rest of the fruit ration can be taken in dates.

There'll be no brightly lighted windows to lure Yuletide shoppers this year, either, for the country is saving all possible electricity for industry.

Not Wholly Austere

BUT THE FACE of London is not to be wholly austere. Some 500 Christmas trees are on show along the balconies of Regent st. stores at a cost of $4000. Pillared facades on Oxford st. are bright with evergreens and huge circus figures.

Entertainment is far from rationed, and this Christmas will ring up the curtain on a dazzling round of Yuletide shows. Three pantomimes, two circuses and a number of Christmas plays for children will cheer London's holiday season.

Pantomimes are the traditional fairy tales "dressed up" with fun and pageantry into a type of musical comedy with appeal to youngsters and grown-ups. This year London offers "Cinderella," "Humpty Dumpty" and "Babes in the Wood." Pantomimes open on or near Boxing Day (December 26), a national holiday in Britain, so called because in earlier times tradesmen used to arrive at the door with boxes in which the householder could put gifts of money.

There's Magic in Colors and the Most Magic One We Know

Is a Soft Shade of Violet to Captivate a Beau

By Peggy Preston

IT ISN'T the cut—it's the color.

Who is the woman so unwise who does not know that color is her most valuable fashion aid? The right color can make a plain dress becoming; can transform a mediocre hat into a prize piece. In some years we are led astray when the dictates of fashion present us with unfortunate color choices. But this season we are lucky, for coming into high favor with stylists is violet, in shades that are becoming to all.

Violet has been a feminine favorite for generations. We've known it by many names. Grandma called it lavender, lovingly. To mother it was purple. Someone christened it fuschia, but we like it best as plain, old-fashioned violet.

It is one of the most flattering of colors. Lovely with fair skin, it puts flowers in hazel eyes. It has a wonderful effect on dark-skinned beauties with deep brown eyes. With blue eyes it is enchanting.

Jean Spadea, The Washington Post's fashion artist, salutes the current revival of the blue-pink shades in the sketches on this page. She shows how to make violet work for you, according to your type and clothes budget.

Castillo, the custom designer for Elizabeth Arden, puts deep violet accessories with black in figure A. The dinner dress of heavy faille is given drama by the violet gloves. Follow his lead and try a bit of violet in your wardrobes. Try tossing in a chiffon handkerchief. If you like it, progress to gloves. Or why not a muff of violets . . . or a set '(necklace and earrings) of deep amethyst, as pictured below.

Then, if you've the mind for it, flirt with the idea of violet and white organdie for summer wear. Those who are heading southward after Christmas can toy with the idea right now. Traina-Norell, a top-flight stylist, suggests this combination in his resort collection. In Sketch C is his sparkling white organdia dinner frock, the brief bodice splattered with a huge cluster of violets.

You can create the same effect at a midwinter dinner in town. Try a fresh white blouse and black velvet skirt. Then tuck a bunch of violets in the belt. Fake ones are as pretty as real ones, and more enduring.

ONE OF THE prettiest suits on the southern sands this winter will be the one by Frances Sider in figure F. It is sarong-draped and made of mauve and violet cotton plaid. Tina Leser, who has a fanciful way with sports clothes, puts several violet ensembles in her resort collection. In figure D is a cotton tweed dress and coat ensemble of pale blue-pink.

There is a lavender tinted sunback cotton frock with stole by Alder & Alder in figure E. And in Miami, right now, the local designers are showing the bustle-backed dress at right. It's of plum-colored cotton eyelet, over green.

Our good friend Henry Rosenfeld is on hand to remind us that it is not only the high-fashion designers who faithfully foretell styles. In the sketch at far right, Mr. Rosenfeld presents a low-budget frock of pure silk shantung in a shade he describes as African violet.

Miss Lucy di Zarega Chooses Date of Wedding

Leesburg, Va., Dec. 11.—Lucy Harrison di Zerega, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. B. di Zerega of Leesburg, has chosen Saturday, January 15, for her marriage to Stuart P. Rich of Wayne, Pa., son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Rich. The wedding will take place at 4 p. m. in St. James Episcopal Church here. The ceremony will be performed by the Rev. J. Manly Cobb, rector, and the Rev. G. Peyton Craighill of Millwood, Va., a former rector of St. James. A reception will follow in the parish hall.

Mary Rust and her finance, James Brent Clarke, jr., both of Washington, were weekend guests at Rockridge, home of Miss Rust's parents, Mr. and Mrs. David N. Rust. Miss Rust and Mr. Clarke also will be married in St. James Church in February.

Mr. and Mrs. Edgar J. Orme, jr., entertained at a dinner party on Saturday night honoring Air Commodore F. R. D. Swain and Mrs. Swain, who have been the guests of their brother-in-law and sister, Commonwealth's Attorney and Mrs. Stirling M. Harrison. The Swains left Sunday for Washington to visit Mrs. Swain's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles LeFevre, and on December 12 the couple will return to London.

Arrive From Canada

Mr. and Mrs. John T. Owen arrived in Leesburg on Monday from their summer home in Canada. They stopped en route in Detroit, where they spent several weeks. Mr. and Mrs. Owen are stopping at the Leesburg Inn . . . John Welbourn of Charleston, W. Va., was a weekend guest of his parents, Rev. and Mrs. J. Armistead Welbourn.

Miss Lucy Di Zerega is spending the weekend in Philadelphia as the guest of Miss Cynthia Bogert. Miss Bogert visited in the di Zerega home over the past weekend . . . Mrs. Eva G. McCabe will leave December 19 for Tazewell, Va., to spend the holidays with Mrs. Emma S. Franklin and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Gillespie. She will be accompanied by Miss Jessie Franklin of Washington.

Dr. Raymond Pinchbeck, dean of Richmond College of the University of Richmond, was the guest speaker on Monday evening at the Purcellville Library under the sponsorship of the League of Women Voters of Loudoun County. Dr. Pinchbeck, a tax expert, discussed taxes and the benefits derived from taxes.

To Visit Parents

Miss Mary Page Hutchison, student at Agnes Scott College in Decatur, Ga., will arrive by plane December 16 to spend the holidays with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence S. Hutchison.

Mrs. Frank P. Smoot was in Williamsburg on Monday to attend a meeting of the State Infantile Paralysis Chapter. Mrs. Smoot has been appointed leader in the Woman's Activity Committee for Loudoun Chapter. The Smoots had with them over the weekend their daughter, Miss Anne Smoot, and Howard Coster of Washington.

"Cinder," an oil painting by a local artist, Miss Betty Tiffany, has been purchased by the Corcoran Gallery of Art, where it has been on exhibit. "Cinder" portrays one hobo taking a cinder out of the eye of another.

W. W. Floyd, road superintendent, has been transferred from Loudoun County to Saluda, Va., and will assume his new duties after January 1. Mr. Floyd and his family, who have been in Leesburg for several years, will move shortly after the first of the year.

Colonial Daughters Aid Woodlawn Fund

In honor of its president, Mrs. Arthur C. Houghton, the District of Columbia Society, Daughters of Colonial Wars, contributed $125 to the Woodlawn Foundation toward the preservation of historic Woodlawn. The gift was made recently by the historical and genealogical committee of the organization, which is composed of Mrs. Ralph Stevens Pendexter, chairman; Mrs. William W. Badgley, Mrs. Roger Williams, Mrs Oscar L. Layton and Mrs. Leroy W. Tilton.

Mrs. Buck Reports

Women of Japan, Korea Eager to Study in U. S.

By Genevieve Reynolds

A FIVE-WEEK tour of the Orient has convinced Mrs. J. L. Blair Buck, president, General Federation of Women's Clubs, that Japanese and Korean women are eager to obtain scholarships for study in the United States. In both Tokyo and Seoul, she found the gentler sex vigorous joiners of organizations and ardent advocates of welfare projects.

Women's organizations in the Philippines are engaged in rebuilding as well as rehabilitation programs. Native Chinese women's groups are aiding refugees and other welfare work. American women's clubs in Shanghai are being disbanded because of the present situation. Normally, their doings and aims are similar to those of their sisters here, according to the federation head.

Mrs. Buck visited Japan and Korea at the invitation of the Supreme Command of the Allied Powers to aid the women in those countries to interpret the democratic functioning of feminine clubs in the United States. Her stay in Shanghai was prompted by the invitation of the American Women's Clubs there. Affiliated federation clubs were her hostesses in Manila and in Hawaii.

Receives Keys to Manila

WHILE IN MANILA the GFWC president was presented the keys to the city by Mayor Manuel De La Fuente and participated in the inauguration of the Philippines' National Federation of Women's Clubs' new headquarters—a two-story white structure of stone and wood that clubwomen of America help to build. This Escoda Memorial Clubhouse was dedicated to the late Josefa Llanes Escoda, wartime president of the BGWC, who with her husband, Antonio H. Escoda, Manila newspaperman, was executed by the Japs for their aid to prisoners of war, including American soldiers and civilian internees. During the liberation, the NFWC headquarters was destroyed by bombs and by fire.

After the Philippine clubwomen notified the American clubwomen of the building's destruction, immediate support was pledged. So their club sisters of this country contributed more than $10,000 toward the new edifice.

Here are some of her findings in the various countries Mrs. Buck stopped.

Reports What She Found

JAPAN—Leaders expressed the need for scholarships to train teachers and librarians. Nipponese gentler sex were impressed by democratic movement because it advanced them from the slave to handmaiden status. Few of them, however, yet understood the democratic organization of women's clubs as practiced by the millions of women's groups in the United States.

Whenever Mrs. Buck discussed the organizations of this country, the Japanese women repeatedly asked, "Are they subsidized by the Government?" "They think the government should underwrite every organization," she explained. "Because their own government did before the occupation it is difficult for them to comprehend any other method."

FOR EXAMPLE, Mrs. Buck told several Japanese women's clubs that Secretary of State Marshall had addressed the GFWC at its Portland convention last summer. "Did the Government send him?" was the first question they put to her.

"One of the consuming interests of the Tokyo ladies is American styles. Fashion books are passed from hand to hand until worn out," commented the federation head.

No Affiliations Permitted

According to Mrs. Buck none of the Japanese women's clubs has been permitted to affiliate with international organizations because of SCAP's fear of Communist influence and infiltration.

During a two-hour conference with General MacArthur, the Supreme Commander of the Allied Powers, expressed the belief that the hope of continuing democracy after SCAP pulls out depends mostly upon the women.

KOREA—The GFWC affiliated group there numbers about 1,200,000 women. As a rule each woman belongs to at least four different organizations. One of their long range requests was for scholarships to train welfare workers and home industry craft leaders in order to lighten their overwhelming household burdens.

On the more pressing list the Koreans placed candles, school books and supplies plus warm clothing. "They need little things like candles because their electricity has been cut off from the Russian-occupied north. Candles was one of the things all emphasized," explained Mrs. Buck, adding, "Koreans are the poorest people I have ever seen. They really need everything."

Children, Flowers Are Much Alike

Raising children is very much like growing flowers. One provides the proper soil, warmth and light and lets them grow. And like flowers, children must be raised for their own sakes alone.

For parents, one of life's deepest satisfactions lies in watching their children grow, but says a leading child psychiatrist, parents are also responsible for the kind of an adult their child will be. The future of the world depends upon the proper maturing of its children says Dr. Leon J. Saul in the November issue of the Woman's Home Companion.

In this article Dr. Saul lists some of the most important principles in guiding a child to emotional maturity. A child, says the psychiatrist, should be treated with the same respect accorded every member of the family regardless of age. Indignities may hurt him even more than they do adults.

Another thing parents must learn early is that children learn from what we do rather than from what we say. They follow examples far more readily than words. And, since children do not learn overnight, their guidance should be steady, consistent and gentle. Strict, unyielding discipline is not the key to training for good habits. The Companion article points out that violence, fear and discord in men and women are signs that something has gone wrong in their emotional development — generally they are reacting to psychological mistreatment in childhood. So it becomes more and more obvious that the home is the workshop which turns out the men and the women of tomorrow. To have strong, good men and women, we must first have healthy, happy children.

WHEN the Philippines' National Federation of Women's Clubs inaugurated its new headquarters—the Escoda Memorial Clubhouse—on Dec. 4, Mrs. J. L. Blair Buck, president, General Federation of Women's Clubs, participated in the ceremony. The federation head (front right) is seen planting a Fil-American tree at the dedication of the NFWC in Manila. Lending assistance is Mrs. Mercedes Llanes (left), mother of the wartime NFWC president, Mrs. Josefa Escoda, to whom the edifice is a memorial. Looking on (left to right) are Mrs. Paz R. Cuerpocruz, NFWC, director; Mrs. Asuncion Perez, Social Welfare Commissioner and the only woman member of the Philippine Cabinet (without portfolio); Mrs. F. C. Cadwaller and Mrs. Rosario Arambulo — two sisters of Mrs. Escoda; Mrs. Pilar Hidalgo Lim, former NFWC president, who lectured to women

Sorority Plans Christmas Carol Sings

Members and alumnae of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority in the Washington area have planned several "coffee carol sings" for the morning of December 21 when Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians will broadcast a special program calling attention to the need of help for the speech-handicapped.

The broadcast and accompanying carol singing are planned to "put a song into the hearts of the speechless," and to honor especially the work of the famed non-profit school of speech correction, the Institute of Logopedics at Wichita, Kans.

The institute has been a principal national project of Kappa Alpha Theta and during the past several years the sorority has contributed more than $20,000 to the speech center.

Mrs. Paul Shorb, president of the Washington alumnae chapter of the sorority, is in charge of arrangements for the morning gatherings. And members of the "Sing Along" committee include Mrs. Glen M. Vickery, Mrs. Donald Hogate, Mrs. Edward T. Cook, Mrs. Roger Johnson, Mrs. Francis Fassett, Mrs. Ogden Brown, Mrs. Scott, R. Brewer, Mrs. Thomas L. Eagan, Mrs. W. F. Mallen, Mrs. Frank Dennis and Mrs. Clement A. Parker.

The active chapter at George Washington University, whose president is Miss Rosemary Glenn, is organizing campus "Sing Alongs" to which all members of the student body are invited.

About Club for Child Psychology Study

I am one of a group of young married women and mothers who are interested in joining or in forming a club for the purpose of studying child psychology, or general problems and guidance. Is there a national group called the Child Conservation League? H. G. P.

The address of the Child Conservation League is 173 West Madison ave., Chicago, Ill. Mrs. E. V. Howard is the general secretary.

Can you furnish me the name of competent teachers for a child of 11 in the field of handicraft work — especially metal and leather crafts? M. S. S.

Classes in these subjects at local hobby shops seem to be all for adults. Some of the playgrounds have afternoon handicraft classes for youngsters, but these are principally in crepe paper or gimp work. You might inquire about your local playground through the District of Columbia Recreation Department. Several settlement houses here in Washington have handicraft classes. Georgetown House, 3224 N st. nw., has a handicraft class Monday and Thursday afternoons for girls 9 to 12 and a similar class on Monday evening. They make earrings, bill folds, pot holders, and the like. Juanita K. Nye Council House, 530 8th st. sw., has afternoon sewing, clay modeling and painting classes for youngsters. Barney Neighborhood, 470 N st. sw., has classes in plastics, hand weaving, and pin and bead work for girls 8 to 15, and a carpenter shop for boys. Friendship House, 619 D st. se., offers free classes to children in painting, drawing, and clay modeling several afternoons a week.

This is about all the information I have been able to round up on the subject, despite assistance from several sources. Perhaps readers will have additional suggestions to help you find a handicraft teacher or class for your youngster.

I have a small spot of rose-colored paint on one of a pair of brown suede shoes, and would like to know if there is any way of removing it. The paint is just above the sole but I have not tried any method of removing it for fear of harming the suede. C. L. J.

I wouldn't advise your trying to remove the spot yourself. Take the shoes to a quality shoe repair shop or to a firm specializing in leather work. One of the latter may be reached by calling Executive 0961.

Have washed my favorite chintz drapes and they have lost their crispness. How could this be restored? Thought of just using starch. K. D.

Some of the body and glaze can be restored to chintz through the use of a light starch, followed by ironing while damp with a hot iron.

Could you put me in touch with some person or institution where it would be possible to have some cotton rags I have on hand braided into a rug? J. J. L.

We do not have a list of places where you can get rugs braided, but perhaps one of our readers will have a suggestion.

Can you give me the recipes used for krumkake irons and ebleskivers? If these are not available, could you give me some idea of the cakes these make? J. E. McM.

A recipe for krumkaker, or rolled wafer, follows. Krumkaker irons, which resemble waffle irons, make a very thin cake and transfer a dainty design.

KRUMKAKER

½ cup butter
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
1 cup cream
1½ cups sifted flour
½ teaspoon vanilla
¼ teaspoon salt

Mix all ingredients together thoroughly and pour batter into the iron. Close iron tightly. When thoroughly baked, roll up on cone or cylinder until cool. This recipe serves eight.

"Ebleskivers" has me stumped, though I have a recipe for Eple Kake (Norwegian apple cake). Can you help, readers?

Can you reprint the recipe for Russian tea? E. L. M.

Here is the Russian tea recipe sent in by G. G. She says that it is delicious served with fruit cake:

Russian Tea
Juice 6 oranges
Juice 6 lemons
4 cups sugar
2 tablespoons cloves, tied in bag
Tea
Candied cherries, orange, and lemon peel

Make sirup of sugar and a little water and cook with spices until good spicy sirup results. Make 20 cups fresh hot tea. Add sirup and juices and stir well when ready to serve; drop candied cherries, orange and lemon peel in cups as garnish.

My children want a dog for Christmas. Could you tell me where I might find a half-grown beagle hound, healthy but not pedigreed? We cannot afford to pay a very high price J. S. L.

I'd suggest watching the "Dogs, Pets, Kennels" column in the classified advertising section of The Washington Post. You can also insert your own "dog wanted" ad in this column. Another idea would be to check with the District of Columbia Pound, South Capitol and I sts. sw. If you see a dog there that you like, you can obtain him by paying a $2 fee and $3 for a license.

Will you publish the formula for fireproofing cotton cloth, i. e., cretonne and other hangings? M. E. G.

Washable materials can be fireproofed in the following way: Mix up a pound of ammonium phosphate and 2 quarts of water. When the ammonium phosphate is completely dissolved, dip the material in it, then squeeze out and hang to dry. This solution will wash out so materials must be dipped again to keep them fireproof after each laundering.

My incompletely trained 2-year-old stained my studio couch, leaving a large faded spot, although I sponged the place off well with water. What can I do to make the spot less conspicuous? D. C. G.

If the color was not destroyed, but only changed, you may improve the appearance by sponging with a solution of 2 tablespoons of household ammonia to one cup of water. If this doesn't restore the color, sponge with white vinegar. If neither restores the color the dye has been destroyed. In that case, you can make the spot less conspicuous by slightly dampening it with water and then applying dress dye in a matching color with a small paint brush.

I would like some information on decoupage work. Do any hobby shops give instruction in it? C. W. T.

Decoupage, or the cutting of pictures and placing them on another background to make a design, does not seem to be practiced today. I have been unable to find a hobby shop which gives instructions in it.

It's New!

By Lucia Brown

WOULD YOU like to give your house a Christmas gift? Or make it beautiful for all the Christmas company you're expecting? Here's a round-up of a few of the attractive and useful new household things on the market:

A NEW PATTERN in fine china is "Country Gardens," which just arrived in Washington last week. It was designed and made by a well-known American firm especially to fit into a background of modern furnishings. Trarslucent and lustrous, the fine ware bears a design of slim, waving flower sprays. Gold edges band the graceful plates, saucers, and cups.

SOFT AND VELVETY as a mole's fur is a new seamless chenille carpeting which is dyed and woven to meet individual color and size requirements. It's a luxurious item, available through local decorators, who can get it to match precisely fabrics or other samples.

Since it comes in widths up to 20 feet, it goes on the floor wall-to-wall without a single seam to mar the rich elegance of its surface. And one of the finest attributes of this carpeting is the relative speed with which you can get it. Decorators have been waiting 5 to 6 months for special-order chenilles, but this one you can have dyed and sized to order in less than six weeks.

PLASTIC DRAPERIES that look like colorful chintz, cretonne, and linen are a good-looking and practical new item. They're not expensive and they come in all sorts of gay prints and colors that make them usable in living or bedroom, dining or recreation room. These plastic draperies, they say, refuse to catch dirt, go limp, or get shabby. To clean them, you simply sponge with soap and water or toss them in the washing machine. No ironing is necessary, and the draperies won't stretch or shrink. They're heavy-looking, too, self-lined and with automatic plastic pleater top.

NEW GIMMICK FOR HANGING UP CUPS is a decorative plastic device made by a Maryland firm. It's really a "cup-clip" which holds each cup in a firm grip. Made of a plastic that is gentle to the glaze, it protects cups against chips, scratches, and breakage caused by nesting or hanging on hooks. The racks, which hold four cups, are easily installed in any position—vertical, horizontal, or at an angle. They come in red, white, or ivory, hold cups snugly under shelves, on walls or cupboard doors.

A velvet-soft and seamless floor covering is this made-to-order chenille

THE new china design, "Country Garden", sets the style note for this dinner party. The silver is in a new pattern, too, called "Madeira"

Rev. Spence to Talk To St. Paul's Guild

The Rev. John S. Spence, director of the Bureau of Education of the Diocese of Washington, will be guest speaker at the Tuesday evening meeting of the St. Paul's Academy Guild.

The meeting will be held in the school auditorium at 8 p. m.

In its sixth year, the guild has a 100 per cent membership—each student represented by a parent or guardian in the organization.

The guild has raised $14,000 which has been used to enlarge the gymnasium program; to build a new library, to install a new lighting system, to decorate the auditorium and lunchroom, to provide scholarships, etc.

Miss Leda Wolman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Wolman of Washington, formerly of Baltimore, is the bride-elect of Morton Donald Berkow. Their marriage will take place in June. Mr. Berkow is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Berkow of Washington, formerly of Baltimore. Miss Wolman is attending Wilson Teachers' College, and Mr. Berkow is attending the George Washington University Medical School

Area Students Appear in Play

Five Washington area students of Wilson College, Chambersburg, Pa., had roles in "We Won't Take It With Us," which was presented at the school last evening.

Those who took part in the original production include Miss Bernice Braskamp, Miss Anne Brierley, Miss Shirley Howes, Miss Anne Pearce and Miss Dorothy Stewart. Miss Stewart was also publicity chairman for the production.

Officers Elected

The District of Columbia Cancer Aid Group will elect officers and board of directors at its meeting slated for Monday, December 20, 8:15 p. m., at 3647 16th st. nw., according to Mrs. Shirley Erlich, group president.

Chapman to Speak To Women Voters On U. S. Resources

"Use and Misuse of Our National Resources" will be the subject of an address to be made to the District of Columbia League of Women Voters by Oscar L. Chapman, Undersecretary of the Interior at their luncheon meeting on Tuesday, December 14, at 12:15, at the YWCA.

Another high ranking official of the Interior Department will address the evening group of the league at their meeting on the same date. He is William E. Warne, Assistant Secretary of the department, and his subject will be "Conservation to Meet Our Domestic and World Needs." The meeting of the evening group is scheduled for 7:45 at 1626 K st. nw.

Both officials have had long records of service in the department. Mr. Chapman was appointed Assistant Secretary in 1933 and was promoted to Undersecretary in March of 1948. Mr. Warne was for 14 years assistant commissioner of reclamation in which capacity he did extensive field research on conservation and development.

Preceding the luncheon meeting league member will hear "Oral Briefs for Action," a program to inform them of activities in the various program areas.

Red Cross Yule Party At Carlton Saturday

A Christmas party for Red Cross workers who served in the Mediterranean Theater of Operations will take place at the Carlton Hotel on Saturday, December 18, from 6 to 9 o'clock. Anne Griffith, costume artist, and a former program director overseas, is in charge of arrangements.

Nature-Lover Naturally Picked a Pumpkin

He set his face to make the nearest light
And marched to beat the silence through the wood."

Current Witch-Hunt Lacks Others' Class

THE CURRENT witch-hunting spasm is staged less elegantly than last season's Howard Hughes-Johnny Meyers jamboree. Instead of the Senate Office Building's crimson carpet and crystal chandeliers, the Un-American Activities Committee hearings are held in the new House Office Building in a largish office equipped with a dias, long press tables and a number of regulation desks. The decorations include flags of various armed service units and the original Iwo Jima photograph. (Three soldiers struggling through terrific wind to plant our flag, remember?)

ONE OF THE THREE, a sergeant, not long ago dropped in to see it. The committee fills some seven rooms, an executive staff of around 30 does the paper work. The famous Pumpkin Papers are kept in a corner room with a policeman on constant guard. There's nothing unusual about the offices except a plethora of aspidistra type plants, their pots neatly wrapped (by artistic staff members) in silver foil. When sessions are "closed" photographers and reporters, lounge, sit on folding chairs in the corridor. They read, gossip. But when anyone new heads down corridor toward the committee rooms, they leap to unanimous action like salmon bounding upstream. The other afternoon, after a slack period, a colored lady, large paper shopping bag in hand, marched in, asked for the committee.

REPORTERS, scenting a second leguminous microfilm cache in the voluminous carryall, stampeded, almost trampled the poor woman. She proved, however, nothing more sinister than one of the building cleaning ladies! And so it goes, day after day!

Emily Kimbrough Makes Own Material

EMILY KIMBROUGH and Betty Smith, stellar representatives of our feminine intelligensia, paused briefly in town for The Washington Post's Book and Author luncheon. Miss Kimbrough, brunette, svelte, twinkly and the mama of twin 19-year-old daughters, makes a good living from having peculiar things happen to her, retelling them entertainingly. Almost professionally absent-minded, her most recent aberration happened en route to Washington. She had skimmed through a radio recording; her bags were in the apartment house lobby.

TO SNAG A TAXI quickly she hustled down the street. Suddenly she heard anguished cries, her secretary thudding after, was pointing frantically to Miss K's knees. The author glanced down, was horrified. Over a black slip she had put blouse, jacket, completely forgotten her skirt! Miss Smith, more precise about living details, has finished a new book "Tomorrow Will Be Better." She had trouble locating her hotel reservation here and since Smiths are so numerous, tried to identify herself to the clerk. "I'm Betty Smith, 'Tomorrow Will Be Better.'" she said. The clerk glared "I'm Robert Smith, Peace It's Wonderful!" he snarled.

1948 Home accident deaths. 234
1947 Deaths for same period 211

A two-year-old boy painted his entire body with iodine last week and became one of 87 home-accident victims treated at Washington hospitals.

Here are some other rare accidents that occurred during the week in Washington homes:

A piece of steakbone lodged in an adult's throat, requiring an esophagus operation to remove it.

A grandmother gave her year-old grandson camphorated oil, thinking it was caster oil.

A year old child drank a half-glass of clothes bleach, and a 14-months-old child swallowed a quantity of mothflakes.

Falls, according to the Red Cross home accident survey, accounted for 38 of the home accidents. Of these, three resulted in deaths and 10 in fractures of the hand, ankle, finger, collarbone, elbow, hipbone, skull or arm. A 68-year-old man tripped over his shoestring and broke his collarbone.

Besides falls, the Red Cross reported four accidental poisonings, four cases of foreign bodies in ear, nose and throat, 15 accidental cuttings, and 22 other home accidents.

Miss Torrey, Raymond Davis, Jr., Wed

Miss Anna Marsh Torrey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Safford Torrey of Storrs, Conn., and Raymond Davis, jr., of Center Moriches, Long Island, were married December 4 at Storrs Congregational Church, the Rev. John Garland Waggoner officiating. A reception followed at the home of the bride's parents.

Miss Mary Dickinson Torrey, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. Earl Fowler of Cambridge, Mass., was best man, and the ushers were Bernard Brody of Rochester, N. Y., and the two brothers of the bride, John Torrey and Charles Torrey.

After a wedding trip to New Hampshire, Mr. and Mrs. Davis will live at Upton, Long Island, where both are on the staff of the Brookhaven National Laboratory.

Miss Drill Engaged

Mrs. Rose Holtzman of Washington has announced the engagement of her daughter, Miss Jean Drill, to Simon Perlman, son of Mrs. Philip Perlman of Carnegie, Pa. The wedding will take place in the spring.

Harris & Ewing

Miss Jasmine Armstrong is the bride-elect of William Edward Turner, and her wedding will take place in the early spring. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jasper H. Armstrong of Silver Spring. Mr. Turner is the son of Mr. and Mrs. H. Melvin Turner of Baltimore. Both Miss Armstrong and Mr. Turner are graduates of the University of Maryland

How to Get That Extra Room

THAT extra space you need for midnight snacks and handicraft and bridge parties needn't be a dream of the too-far future if you have a convertible attic, basement, sunroom or breezeway.

Christine Holbrook, Better Homes and Gardens home furnishing editor, says you may even find that rearranging the furniture in rooms you're using will turn the trick.

Eating in the kitchen is a good old American custom. A breakfast corner can be worked into many kitchens in a nook or alcove handy to the sink and stove and yet out of regular kitchen traffic. Set a work counter at right angles to the wall to make a nook where none exists. Pur your tables beneath a sunny corner window or try a counter with stools or a drop-leaf table against a wall. If you have the space, a regular table and chairs will be more comfortable than built-ins. The nook also will serve for play space on rainy days, meal-planning, laundry-sorting and canning.

Many homes built in the '20s were blessed with a sunroom jutting out from either the living or dining room. If you need an extra room for a study-guest room, filling in the sunroom walls and rearranging the windows will be a lot cheaper than building another room. With walls filled in, you'll have the makings of a snug library which can serve as extra living room, a den or a guest room.

Cards Create Wastepaper Business Boom

By Jack R. Ryan

New York, Dec. 11 (AP).—One of the minor laments of the Yuletide season is the fate of the Christmas card which has delivered its message and served its purpose.

Breathes there a housewife with soul so dead that she feels no pang as she dumps all those lovely cards into a wastebasket?

Ah, woe, the artistic and poetic inspiration that went into them—not to mention the sender's time spent picking them out!

True, many used cards may be passed along to amuse youngsters in hospitals and shelter homes. But with Americans buying an estimated 1½ billion cards this Christmas, the supply for this purpose is too overwhelming.

Back in 1946, a charitable organization known as the Save the Children Federation pleaded for 10 million cards to brighten the lives of underprivileged children. The response was staggering—"easily a 100 million," said one official, "so many that they're still sticking out of our ears two years later."

The greeting card people, of course, like to emphasize that many a card is tucked away and cherished, or finds its way into a scrapbook, or is made into a lampshade.

But what of all the rest?

Well, if it's any consolation, a good portion of those cards of yours may be around for a long, long time after you've dumped them out.

You won't recognize them, but they may turn up as part of a valentine you get February 14. Or they may come out part of an Easter candy box. Or, more likely, they'll become wallboard for somebody's long awaited new home.

That is, provided they fall into the eager hands of America's big wastepaper industry. For Christmas cards, usually printed or engraved on high grade paper sized for color reproduction, make desirable wastepaper.

This is boom season for the 200-million-dollar-a-year wastepaper business. Mills are stocking up before bad weather cuts collections. And imagine for yourself the amount of corrugated packaging materials moving these days from wholesalers to retailers, the tons and tons of tissue, gift boxes and wrapping paper pouring out of department stores into postoffices and then to living room floors under the Christmas trees. December is a busy month for wastepaper sorters and balers.

Last year, 7,845,000 tons of wastepaper were consumed in this country for a new yearly record.

Colley S. Baker, director of the Eastern conservation committee of the wastepaper consuming industries, estimates the total for 1948 will be down to something over 7,500,000 tons. That's because pulp production is picking up, he says. Also, freight rates are about 40 per cent higher than they were right after the war, and this limits the collection and marketing area for wastepaper to the urban regions not too far away from the mills.

One of the biggest sources of wastepaper, of course, is office buildings. In the larger buildings, the paper taken from wastebaskets usually is put carefully into bags or crates tagged with the date and the address of the office. Then these receptacles are held for 24 hours before the paper is sorted. That's so any valuable papers which may have been thrown away by mistake can be recovered.

Baker tells of one top-flight radio comedian who misplaced his script about an hour before his program. Searchers found it in the big wastepaper file at the collection plant down near the Brooklyn Bridge just before his deadline.

Then there was the harried investor a year or so ago who somehow threw $50,000 worth of bonds into a wastebasket. They also were found, in the properly identified bag of waste.

After the 24-hour safety period, the paper is dumped onto a moving belt where it is sorted into any of about 30 grades. Here also, foreign items like the stenographer's old lipstick are picked out, and undesirable paper like carbons. It takes only a few sheets of carbon paper to ruin a whole bale of white wastepaper with its black pigment.

New Library At Boys Club

The Women's Auxiliary of the Metropolitan Police Boys Club will play a spotlighted role when the new $200,000 MPB Club No. 4 at 816 6th st. sw., is dedicated today with elaborate ceremonies. A new library, named in honor of Mrs. Joseph L. Arnold, auxiliary president, will be unveiled along with a special Arnold marker during the ritual.

It was through Mrs. Arnold's efforts and those of her coworkers in the auxiliary that some $3000 was raised to equip and to maintain the library. Mrs. James A. Councilor, sr., will be chairman of the library committee and working with her will be Mrs. George A. Davis, Mrs. Al Lee, Mrs. Renah F. Camalier, Mrs. Charles Basseches, and Mrs. John Andrews.

Mrs. Robert J. Barrett, wife of the Superintendent of Police, chairmans the refreshment committee. Mrs. Robert C. Simmons and Mrs. Ralph Pittman, cochairmen, will be assisted at the punch bowl by other committee members, including Mrs. Floyd Truscott, Mrs. Harvey Callahan, Mrs. James Colliflower, Mrs. R. F. Harper, Mrs. Frances Kane, Mrs. Max Farrington, Mrs. Charles Basseches and Mrs. Robert Lynch.

English-Speaking Union to Meet

English-Speaking Union will meet for tea on Tuesday, December 14, at the United Nations Club. Mrs. Walter Tuckerman is in charge of arrangements.

Taking turns at the tea tables will be Mrs. Barron P. Dubois, Mrs. George Scriven, Mrs. James Murdock, Mrs. Perry Heath, Mrs. Alfred Quinton, jr., Mrs. Edward Meigs and Mrs. Thomas W. Huntington.

Following the tea new officers for the Washington branch of the Union will be elected. Lyttleton Fox, acting president, will preside. There will also by reports from Edwin B. Fox, treasurer, and Leander McCormick Goodhart. Members may make reservations for the affair by calling ADams 9040.

Crittenton Unit Meets Wednesday

The Chevy Chase Circle will meet at the Florence Crittenton Home for luncheon at 1 o'clock Wednesday.

Onions for Hamburgers

To prepare onions to accompany hamburgers, liver or steak, peel them, cut them in half and then slice into lengthwise strips. Saute the onion strips in hot fat for a few minutes, turning frequently, then cover the saucepan and let them steam until they are as tender as desired. A few drops of gravy coloring sauce added when they are cooked will insure a good rich brown; mix the onion strips with the sauce well before serving.

Have a Homemade Holiday

It will be a merrier Christmas all around if you help your children make it a homemade holiday. Let them have a hand in making this year's gifts and trimming the house.

To get you started, here are some suggestions from this month's Woman's Home Companion. You might start by making a Christmas ball tree as a centerpiece for the dinner table. The props you need are a low candlestick, balloon stick, a cork, lace paper doilies and glitter balls in graduated sizes.

First step is to whittle cork to fit candlestick, then make a hole in top of cork for the balloon stick and place cord and stick in candleholder. Next, snip a hole in center of largest doily, slip over stick, then add the largest size Christmas tree balls. Add another paper doily and a second row of the ornaments in a smaller size. Do this until you have five or six rows of balls, then add the final touch—a pointed tree ornament. That gives your miniature tree a finished look.

You can encourage your children to make their own attractive and original gift paper. Inexpensive wrappings can be made by putting gay designs in poster paint and crayon on shelf paper.

Handsome table mats and napkins—as well as hand towels—can be turned out by a small artist armed with textile paint and gay, nonwoven fabric. Encourage your youngster to create original designs in decorating these gifts. It develops his creative ability.

Windows and doors can be trimmed inexpensively and effectively with sprays of pine branches, looped with wide splashy ribbon bows or brightly painted cones.

Perez Tells Best Way to Learn Rumba

Pedro Perez, new director of the Don Pallini dance studio in Washington, points out the fact that Latin American teachers are most naturally qualified to teach the Latin American dance steps now in vogue all over the country. This is because there is more involved in doing the rumba or samba than merely learning a step pattern.

Pedro Perez

Mr. Perez suggests that men and women who want to learn the rumba right learn the Don Pallini way—where Latin American teachers are on hand. Don Pallini studios are open from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Everyone is also invited to join the gay socials every Wednesday night at 10:30 p.m., for 2½ hours of dancing and instruction. The admission is only $1.50.

Peggy

SOR to Honor

The Netherlands Ambassador and Mme. van Kleffens will be guests of honor at the fifty-ninth annual dinner-meeting of the Sons of the Revolution scheduled for Friday, December 17, at the Chevy Chase Club.

The dinner will commemorate the 171st anniversary of the date Gen. George Washington led his army into winter quarters at Valley Forge. Other guests will include W. Hall Harris, general president of the society, and presidents of the Virginia and Maryland chapters.

New officers and board members of the group will be elected following the dinner.

Preparing Prunes

Prunes are delicious when pitted and stuffed with a mixture of soft sharp yellow cheese and finely ground pecan nutmeats. Serve the stuffed prunes on a bed of watercress and serve with dressing.

Remember When You Stood in Line For ANY Nylons?

If you are one of those unimaginative creatures who ask for light tan or dark tan nylons when you shop, give a glance at the names of the new colors in the spring hosiery collection: Naive Beige, Ambergleam, Bronzique Bluglo, Sunsparkle, Cafe Brown, Summer Taupe, Cloudy Grey, Aperitif.

A pair of Naive Beige nylons, please.

Young Prince Is Heard Widely But Seen So Far by Very Few

By Ed L. Campbell

London, Dec. 11 (AP).—Victorians said children should be seen and not heard. Queen Victoria's great-great-great-grandson reverses the rule.

The son, born to Princess Elizabeth and Prince Philip on November 14, has been seen by few people. But his lusty lungs have been heard by practically the entire staff at staid Buckingham Palace.

In fact, say those in a position to know, when the blue-eyed infant who may some day be King decides to voice his opinion, the red-carpeted corridors fairly echo.

Not that the youngster is a bad boy. But Princess Elizabeth is reported to insist on regularity. Babies' tummies are notoriously bad timekeepers. So when hunger beats the clock, the infant prince yells.

At present Elizabeth is nursing the baby. In about two or three months he probably will be placed on the bottle. Except at mealtimes, the little fellow is well behaved. He sleeps long hours in his nursery, nestling his golden-haired head in a curtained cradle.

The cradle usually is placed near a broad window overlooking the Mall. Beside it, in a low chair, sits Nurse Helen Maud Rowe. The nursery itself is a spacious, lofty room. Once it was used as a schoolroom for Princess Elizabeth and her sister, Princess Margaret. The plain, cream-colored walls are hung with gay prints.

Doesn't Lack for Playthings

BABY'S things are kept in a cream-painted cupboard. Included are soft, white woolen shawls and jackets for use when he is taken into the palace gardens for fresh air.

On a shelf are some toys. Included is the rattle which was Princess Elizabeth's own first toy. The royal baby will not lack for playthings.

Baby has his bath promptly at 9 a. m. daily. The water is always carefully tested, the temperature always exactly the same.

Before bathing, he is weighed by Nurse Rowe and his weight charted. Like most babies he lost weight the first three days, but soon regained his original 7 pounds 6 ounces and is now growing steadily.

After the bath, he is taken to his mother for feeding at 10 a. m.

After the feeding, Queen Elizabeth usually visits her daughter and grandson for an hour. The Queen also returns to Elizabeth's apartment after lunch for another peek at the baby before its afternoon nap.

Great-Grandmother Queen Mary and Great Aunt Marina, Duchess of Kent, usually call in the afternoons for tea.

No one outside the royal family and household were allowed to see either the princess or her baby during the first week. But now friends are being invited to call.

The princess is likely to "take it easy" for another month, but the serious news that King George must give up most of his public appearances will mean that she must take up as soon as possible her duties as his "deputy."

An Unexpected Turn

SHE had expected to shoulder this job on a full-time basis during the royal tour of Australia and New Zealand, scheduled for six months beginning late in January. Now that has been canceled because of the King's illness.

On the other hand, cancellation of the tour means that Queen Elizabeth and Princess Margaret will be able to help her with the royal chores.

However it works out, it is not likely to affect the life of the little prince.

Dealing With Problems Off Beaten Path

By Ida Jean Kain

The bulk of figure problems fall into an exercise pattern of waist-whittling, hip-slimming, and chin-lifting. But today's column handles off-the-beaten-track queries that call for corrective measures to combat constipation, visceroptosis, and varicose veins.

Special exercises help overcome constipation, but diet plays an important part too. Reducers often have difficulty because the amount of food is decreased and the bulk lessened. For this reason, daily menus must include liberal amounts of low calorie, bulky vegetables, such as spinach, lettuce, celery, and salad greens; buttermilk in place of skim milk, also cottage cheese; ample amounts of fresh fruits, and whole-grain bread in place of white. Bran can be used to advantage in low calorie diets unless it is not well tolerated. Gelatinous bulk-suppliers such as psyllium seed or agar are excellent.

To Restore Tone

Special exercises which restore tone to the important abdominal muscles help greatly in promoting regularity. Do the following exercise without a girdle or restricting belt: Lie in the safety position—on back, knees bent, soles of feet on floor—and have arms straight out at sides, palms down. Action: lift hips off floor just enough for clearance, then make a complete circle with the hips, swinging first toward the right, upward, around toward the left, down—at this low point pull firmly up and in with the abdominal muscles—and continue circling for six counts. Rest and circle in the opposite direction six counts. Always circle slowly and be sure to move the abdominal muscles, centering the action there.

In visceroptosis (dropped stomach) there is a displacement downward and forward of the abdominal organs with consequent backache and chronic fatigue, and such cases should be under the care of a physician. A special type corset is often advised, one that can be adjusted in such a way as to lift the abdominal organs. The patient is instructed to put the corset on from a lying-down position, with hips elevated to counteract gravity and restore organs to proper position before the corset is fastened to hold them securely.

Beneficial Exercises

Corrective exercise is beneficial. Assume the knee-chest position—standing on knees, bend forward and rest head on folded arms . . . have hips and knees in straight line. Now raise one leg backward, taking a deep breath or two as you lift. Return leg to position, rest, repeat with other leg. Deep breathing is important since the action of the diaphragm helps adjust the organs correctly.

While the cause of varicose veins may be entirely occupational, due to prolonged standing and consequent congestion, there are other, more serious causes, such as obstruction and pressure. In mild cases no special treatment is necessary, and the doctor may approve the wearing of elastic stockings under regular stockings. These are made of very fine elastex and afford mechanical support and cover up the veins.

Corrective measures for abnormal problems require guidance and should be followed only under medical supervision.

Tasty Salad Tip

Equal parts of diced celery and pineapple are excellent for a salad when teamed with black olives and mayonnaise. Serve on shredded escarole or lettuce or on romaine.

★ MORE ABOUT pottery gifts from Top Recker this week—and especially about Italian and British imports, whose charm and low prices seem excellent gestures toward international good-will.

★ THE CLASSIC green and white vases from Italy, which we described last week, are $6, and they look far more expensive. A green-and-white glazed Deruta bowl, at only $6.75, is delicately decorated with pen-like flower drawings. At $5.75, you will find a shapely pitcher, which can be used for small bright flowers and of course for drinks.

★ DINNER-SIZE plates, also from Italy, handsomely decorated and glazed, can be bought singly, to be displayed with your other pottery. Or, if you like to use dramatic dinner plates for special occasions, a set of these will be very useful. $3.75 each.

★ FROM ENGLAND, Top Recker has received more earthenware smoking sets. A cigarette box and man-sized ash trays (4x5 inches) are decorated with a fine engraved-looking railway scene right out of history, and quite cheerfully painted in yellow and black. The box, $2.75. The trays, $1.75 each.

Supreme Court Ruling Hurts Small Business, Senate Witnesses Say

(See Rader Winget's story on shortages in cement industry, Column 8, of this page.—Ed's Note.)

ON APRIL 26 the Supreme Court told the cement industry, in effect: "Look, boys, it looks downright dishonest for you to juggle freight costs so that every barrel of cement costs the same price. From now on, let the customer pay the freight charges. Cut out this 'basing point' funny business."

Basic hope behind the now famous "basing point" decision, which ended a 10-year battle between the cement industry and the Federal Trade Commission, was to end monopolies and antitrust law violations. FTC hoped the decision would stimulate competition among cement manufacturers, bring lower prices and give small business a break.

However, as cement prices soared, small business screamed, "Take to the hills, men, the dam's busted!" And it asked Uncle Sam for help.

Here's the picture as it looks eight months after April 26:

1. Prices of cement, cement by products and steel are up as a direct result of the decision.

2. The ruling has worked against small business, shows evidence of causing sharp repercussion on prices, business and employment, report a vast majority of businessmen who have testified before a Senate Interstate Commerce trade policies subcommittee under Senator Homer Capehart (R., Ind.).

3. The steel industry, which formerly set prices from a "basing point," has now adopted an f.o.b. pricing policy.

Low Cost Depends on Volume Production

4. Cement manufacturers face a loss of distant markets, since they no longer absorb part of freight costs to meet local competition. With a loss of distant markets, producers' volume is cut, thereby losing savings inherent in mass production.

5. Truck lines report increased steel loads as steel buyers seek to hold down freight costs by shifting from rail to motor.

6. Decision has created hundreds of small monopolies, small business claims, instead of breaking up large monopolies.

7. Some type of legislation will be introduced in the Eighty-first Congress in efforts to show all businesses which use a basing-point system or zone pricing, exactly where they stand.

8. Decision affects approximately 120,000 firms engaged in interstate commerce, according to FTC Commissioner Lowell B. Mason. At the rate of 120 cease and desist orders a year, the "FTC would need 1000 years to clear them up," Mason said.

Over 100 Witnesses Testify

SENATOR CAPEHART, whose subcommittee held hearings this week to hear witnesses discuss effects of the decision, said Thursday that his group hasn't heard enough evidence to decide what, if any, legislation will be introduced to clear up the situation.

His subcommittee will sit down with FTC members to analyze testimony and reconcile the differences of opinions advanced by the 100 or so witnesses heard so far.

"We won't do anything to weaken the antitrust laws or powers of the FTC," Senator Capehart declared. "But I feel that the law

Puzzle—Where's the Heating System?

The Copleys' 3-year-old daughter, Carol emphasizes the point to which boosters of radiant heat always point: With warm floors the danger of colds is reduced materially. Valve at far left on baseboard panel can shut off heating panel. Scene is in den of Copleys' home

Mrs. Joseph Copley likes everything about her new home at 910 Highland st., Falls Church, Va., especially the new radiant baseboard panel heating system. Cast iron panels can be seen here in place of ordinary wood trim. Built-in drawers in the master bedroom are one of Mrs. Copley's prides and joys

By Conrad P. Harness

THERE are more new ways to heat a house than you can shake a radiator at. One of the most promising is radiant baseboard panels. The heating contractor can make this system practically invisible to the naked eye, and the heat is just as delightful as a June breeze and as dependable as Sammy Baugh, death and taxes.

Cost of this new method is about 10 per cent higher than conventional types such as forced warm air or hot water radiators.

"And it's worth every dime," declared Joseph Copley, whose new home in Falls Church, Va. boasts the "heating system of the future," as he calls it.

Radiant baseboard heating is different from regular radiant systems installed in scores of local homes and apartments built since the war. There, floor, ceiling or wall panels are heated by means of imbedded pipe coils or warm air ducts. There has been a skyrocketing of demand for this popular method of fighting wintery blasts.

However, radiant baseboard panels are somthing else again. To install this system, the contractor puts cast iron baseboard panels at floor level where the wood base molding is ordinarily placed. A sufficient length is installed to furnish the required amount of heat. Piping inside the baseboard circulates hot water, causing warmth to radiate outward.

This system warms the floors, making them a safe place for children to play on cold days.

Seal Out Cold

INSTALLING the unique system in his home was a labor of love for Copley, a partner in Carroll V. Shreve & Sons, Falls Church heating firm. It is the first such installation by his firm, but Carroll Shreve predicted that the many advantages offered by the system would result in public demand for it.

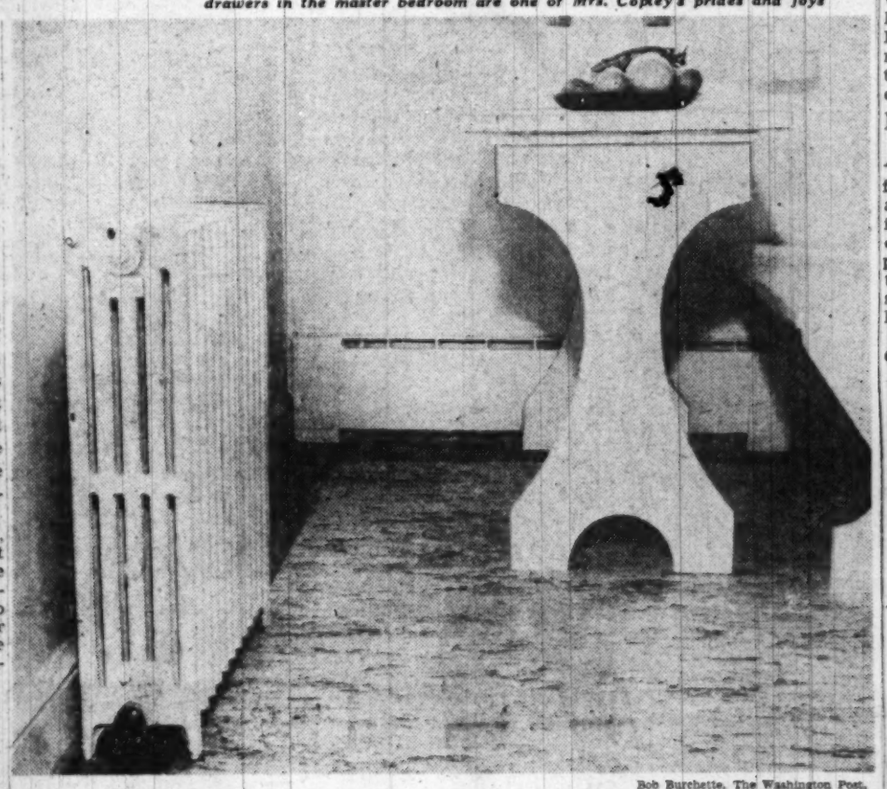
Charles Kendall of Crane Co., 1225 I st. nw., heating equipment manufacturers who equipped the Copley residence, said the installation was 1 of about 15 made so far in the Washington area. Other manufacturers are producing the baseboard units or have announced plans for doing so.

Kendall pointed out that not every house would benefit from baseboard heating. Large homes with high ceilings, large window areas, no insulation, etc. have such a high heat loss that it is often more desirable to use other types of heating. Baseboards function best when installed against insulated walls.

Insulation prevents excessive fuel consumption due to direct conduction from the heating unit through the walls. Savings in fuel, initial costs, and added comfort through the use of insulation were hailed by Kendall.

The baseboard system is in high favor with homemakers.

See BASEBOARD, Page 4, Col. 3



Bob Burchette, The Washington Post.

New baseboard heating system works best in certain areas, such as kitchen, halls or bath, when supplemented by conventional wall radiators. Work counters, range, electric washer, etc., took up so much room in Copleys' kitchen that little space was available for baseboards except in the small breakfast area. Hence, a small radiator was added

High Demand, Price Snarl, Effect Cement

(See story on "basing point" problem, Column 1 of this page. —Editor's Note.)

By Rader Winget

NEW YORK, Dec. 11 (AP).—Unprecedented demand coupled with distribution difficulties has caused a widespread shortage of cement throughout the country despite the highest production in the history of the industry.

The demand stems from the heavy volume of public and private construction dammed up by the war. Distribution difficulties arise from the change some six months ago to f.o.b. prices from the basing point method of quoting prices.

The shortage is peculiar. Statistics show the nationwide lack of cement in the difference between production and consumption. But the shortage is not evenly distributed. You might get cement in one town and not be able to get it in the next.

Production this year probably will hit 205 million barrels of 380 pounds each, an all-time high record. Demand has been steady for housing, public building, highways, big construction projects like dams, and for rural areas. Like everything else, the big demand pent up during the war hit the cement industry like a ton of concrete.

No Lag in Demand

AND to top everything this year, the building season continued far into the fall because of favorable weather. When the demand for cement was supposed to taper off, it didn't. The usual stockpiling period for spring demand turned into a straight shipping season. Stock-piling had to come later.

Why not increase production capacity? One reason is that con-

Westbriar Project Returns Deposits On Steel Homes

Filing of a voluntary petition in bankruptcy by William H. Harman Corp., Delaware manufacturers of an all-steel house, has delayed development plans for the 400-home "Westbriar" subdivision near Vienna, Va., sponsors have reported.

Harman homes were to be erected on half-acre lots at "Westbriar" and over 90 sales contracts were signed by prospective purchasers. Carl Hink, Westbriar sales manager, said all money deposited on contracts had been returned to purchasers.

Hink said the Harman Corp. had a large inventory of steel homes which his firm hoped to erect next Spring if suitable arrangements could be made with the prefab firm. "We'll know where we stand within the next 30 days," he added. No other type of home is being considered for erection at Westbriar until all phases of the Harman supply situation are explored, he said.

Town Is Dying From Kindness

LINCOLN, MASS., Dec. 11.—This quiet little residential community about 17 miles from Boston has the strangest affliction in the world. Its citizens are killing it with love.

They have demonstrated their affection by leaving the town gifts of land and money totaling something over $2,500,000. When you consider that the town's real estate assessment is a little less than four million dollars, it appears that Lincoln is, proportionately, one of the wealthiest towns in the country. Everybody ought to be happy. But not everybody is.

Who Wants a Park?

LINCOLN'S 2000 residents don't need and can't support the high schools, hospitals or museums for which the town has been willed money and property.

"What do we need a park for," said one man, "when we practically live in a park?"

He was referring to the town's most recent gift, the DeCordova estate, which included a 20-room, brick mansion with a library and large collection of art, the surrounding 25-acre property, and over a million dollars to maintain it as a museum and park.

Other residents have similar complaints. They fear the effect of such large properties becoming tax-free, pointing out that the tax rate has jumped 35 per cent in the last two years—from $28 to $38.

Leaving property to Lincoln has been going on since 1761, when one Joseph Brooks willed it 388 pounds, 10 shillings, 5 pence.

Later, the Abbe J. Stearns bequest left Lincoln $1000 "for the silent poor of the town, and I desire that the interest and income shall be paid over (not to town paupers) but to that class of honest, temperate men and women who work hard or are prudent and economical and yet find it difficult to make both ends meet." The trouble is, Lincoln has no poor—silent or otherwise.

They Got Fireworks

THE two most useful bequests were made by men named Pierce and Gordon. The Pierce gift is an estate and funds to establish a hospital and a park. Although they haven't been established, some of the income was put to good use for school dental and child welfare clinics.

Donald Gordon, who felt local farmers worked too hard, left a fund whose income was to be used for town recreation. The town manages to use most of that by putting on an annual Fourth of July fireworks display.

Not much thought was given to Lincoln's gift-burdened status until the town got into litigation with the estate trustees over who should control funds of the DeCordova bequest. Now, two strongly disagreeing factions are arguing it out.

The probequest group claims that no resident should be less than grateful for the gifts and insists that when Lincoln's population increases, the inheritances will be very beneficial to the town.

"But," say the opponents, "our poor little rich town may be killed with kindness."

78 Apartment Units to Start

Bulldozers and grading machines will start clearing land off Rockville Pike next week for erection of the first 78 units in a proposed 700-unit duplex garden apartment development, according to Ring Engineering Co., developers.

The project's entrance will be off Rockville Pike, with the entire project located on a large tract fronting on Rock Creek Park, near Garret Park, Md. Developers said one, two and three-bedroom apartments are planned in the rental project.

Actual construction of buildings is not expected to start before February or March. The builders are erecting a similar type project in Boston. Ring Engineering Co. has constructed large garden type apartments in Arlington.

McShain to Construct New Editor's Building

A contract calling for erection of a 19-story "Editor's Building" at 1729 H st. nw., has been awarded to John McShain, Inc., Philadelphia building firm, by the Kiplinger Washington Agency, Inc., owners.

The building will be 63 feet wide and 100 feet deep and is to be constructed of concrete, steel and limestone.

Arlington Construction $1.2 Million in Nov.

Construction volume in Arlington County last month totaled $1,203,878, slightly under the same month of 1947, which had $1,266,864, according to building permits issued.

The November report of the building inspector, Andrew Jensen, showed permits were issued for erection of 85 residences at an estimated building cost of $927,000. No permits were issued for apartments, semidetached or duplex homes or schools.

Product Previews

A WATCH with a built-in alarm like a cricket's chirp is proving a boon to busy men in all walks of life. It serves as an alarm clock for awakening in the morning and as a reminder wrist-handy throughout the day. A prominent business executive terminates his appointments by the ring of his watch. He sets the alarm before each interview and when it goes off, so does his visitor. Herb Shriner, featured comedian in the Broadway hit, "Inside the U. S. A.", walks off the stage without further comment when his watch rings. The Reader's Digest tells of a salesman who uses his watch to show that he will not take up more than a few minutes of his client's time. Made by Vulcain Watch Co., 29 W. 57th St., New York City.

TABLE accessories made of rosewood or goncalo alves—a rare Brazilian wood—hand-rubbed to bring out the grain, will make unusual Christmas gifts. There are butter bowls, mayonnaise bowls, bonbon dishes, muddlers, salt dishes with tiny matching spoons made by the Salisbury Artisans, workers in rare tropical woods since 1884.

PRESENT for the Christmas stocking is a cross-word dice game. Instead of pips on the seven dice, there are letters on all except two sides that are marked "wild." Some of the letters are red, some are black. If you have a word composed of letters of the same color, score is doubled. Words are formed horizontally and vertically. I-Qubes come in a leather case about the size of a cigar.

NO RUB, no scrub to keep the silverware bright during the holidays if you have a cleaning plate that does the job in jigtime. One of these Oakite plates, with directions for using, is yours for the asking.

MIDGET refrigerator, no larger than a suitcase, weighs only 45 pounds and freezes to 9 degrees below zero. Food storage is approximately 1¼ cubic feet. Freez-ln is especially suitable for summer places, rooms and non-housekeeping apartments, but it also can be used as an auxiliary deep-freeze, ice cube maker, frozen food locker or separate refrigerator for the baby's formulas and bottles.

GIFT that will intrigue the youngsters for hours is a put-together village. The set contains a church, town hall, building with three store fronts, apartment house, four homes, trees, billboards, plus three plastic automobiles. The Skyline Street Village Set is simple to put together and fold up.

KITCHEN aid that we like is a square measuring cup with a removable ridged top for separating egg yolks from the whites. Liquids your without dripping from any corner of this square cup and measurements imprinted on it range from ¼ to 1 cup, with ounce markings from 1 to 8 and centimeters from 25 to 225. Shel-Glo cups are made in clear plastic with a choice of red, blue or white egg separators.

FOOD fanciers who like the broiled-on-a-spit idea will be mighty happy with the Cheftanette. There's nothing to plug in—simply a clock works that will turn the skewers for 30 minutes on one winding. Use it in the fireplace or under the broiler during the winter—outdoors come summer. There are four stainless steel skewers that rotate at just the right speed to seal in the juices of cubes of meat, hamburgers, frankfurters, liver, corn, kidneys, chicken legs, scallops.

BABY GIFT with a touch of whimsy is a Carol Janeway pottery cup and cereal bowl. You can have the child's full name, his birth date, his weight on the cereal dish and any animal design that you choose. The set on our desk has a beautiful blue porcupine to add interest and in the bottom of the cup is the promise that "There is more in the kitchen."

CIGARETTE box for the executive's desk or a jumbo coffee table is long and narrow with four compartments, two for king size and two for regular cigarettes. However, a divider can be removed to accommodate cigars. This solid American walnut box is beautifully designed with tapered ends, has an alcohol-resistant finish, solid brass hinges.

Brazil Fights Illiteracy

Rio de Janeiro, Dec. 11 (AP).—Brazil is at war on illiteracy. A nationwide program started last year now has 700,000 students learning to read and write. Its aim is to teach a million persons a year.

Because of its wide application and its combination with instruction for useful citizenship, it is considered by educators as the leading literacy program in all Latin American countries. Government authorities, alarmed over the fact that only 55 per cent of the 18-year-old age group in 1940 were able to read and write, decided to do something about it.

In 1944, a full program was proposed by Clemente Mariani, Minister of Education. It became effective in 1947 and has since grown with surprising rapidity. It was made accessible to persons ranging in age from 15 to 40 years of age.

The program has been extended throughout all parts of Brazil. This year 500 movie projectors were installed for visual education on such subjects as health, civics, geography and history.

Last year more than 300,000 persons learned how to read and write.

Wellington, New Zealand, Dec. 11 (AP).—The New Zealand government plans to select another 1000 unmarried English workmen for work on hydroelectric projects in New Zealand.

The immigrants required are carpenters, fitters, turners, crane and shovel drivers, plumbers, drain layers, electricians and laborers.

Project of 27 Homes Under Way In Bethesda

A 27-home building program has been launched by Ornstein Construction Co. in the Woodland Estates subdivision of northwest Bethesda, Md., adjoining Greenwich Forest. Some homes have been completed, with others under roof, Ervin Ornstein, president, reported.

Designed by Leroy Werner, architect, the residences are two-story bricks, with three bedrooms upstairs, full basements, located on 55 by 125-foot lots. Variation has been achieved by use of three different elevations and exterior paint schemes.

Attractive features of the $18,990 homes include a porch off the living room and an architectural trellis which screens the kitchen door. The building firm started the Bethesda project after completion of 32 homes this summer in the Southeast.

Finished manufactures account for 70 per cent of American exports.

State Dept. Official Purchases New Home

John E. Peurifoy, Assistant Secretary of State for Administration, has just purchased a newly completed home at 3425 N. Albemarle st., in the Country Club Hills section of Arlington, Va.

The modified French provincial residence of 7 rooms and 2½ baths was built by E. S. Cormany and sold through the offices of Keith D. Brumback. Mr. Peurifoy and his family are expected to occupy their new home by Christmas.

Garage Doors

An overhead type door for the garage saves space, is easiest to open, does not become blocked by ice and snow.

Lustrom Model Home Due to Close Tonight

The Lustron model home at New Hampshire ave. and Rock Creek pkwy. nw., open since Memorial Day, will close tonight at 10 o'clock, sponsors reported. It is understood that the site is to be used as part of the District's new fringe parking program.

Lustron Corp. has announced plans for erection of a model home at Norfolk, Va., to be opened December 18. George T. McLean Co. of Portsmouth, Va., has been named dealer in southeastern Virginia.

Our First Post-War Homes

The same careful planning and supervision has been given to this new group of homes as distinguished our last group in Ellicott Hills (Linnear ave. and Ellicott st.), built before the war. Materials of the same high-grade quality have been used in the construction, and of equal importance, practically the same workmen fabricated it into the homes. We invite you to inspect and judge for yourself and then compare with other recently constructed homes.

The location is one of the most convenient and desirable in the District of Columbia. Schools within a few blocks are Murch Elementary, Deal Junior High and Wilson Senior High (the finest public school group in Washington); St. Ann's Parochial, Immaculata, Friends, St. Alban's, Holy Cross, St. John's. Connecticut Avenue transportation direct downtown. Few minutes walk to several large shopping centers on Conn. and Wisconsin Avenues. Close to Ft. Reno Recreation Center, Ice Palace and new Chevy Chase Recreation Building.

Rubber Panels in Ceiling Heat This Room

Mrs. Copley emphasized how easy it was to place furniture in a room with no radiators sticking out from the wall. Also, she added, the baseboards are air-sealed to prevent dirt streaks or smudges on walls.

She didn't forget the comfort: "It warms my ankles and when they are warm I am comfortable all over."

Copley found that the system worked best when supplemented by conventional wall radiators in strategic points where the heat loss was great or where no baseboards could be installed, such as certain sections of the kitchen, center hall and bathrooms. Both systems work off the same set of pipes through which water is circulated. A gas furnace in the basement completes the system.

Before the baseboards are installed on a job, Kendall said, heating engineers check the heat loss in each room to determine the length of baseboard panel required to heat the room adequately.

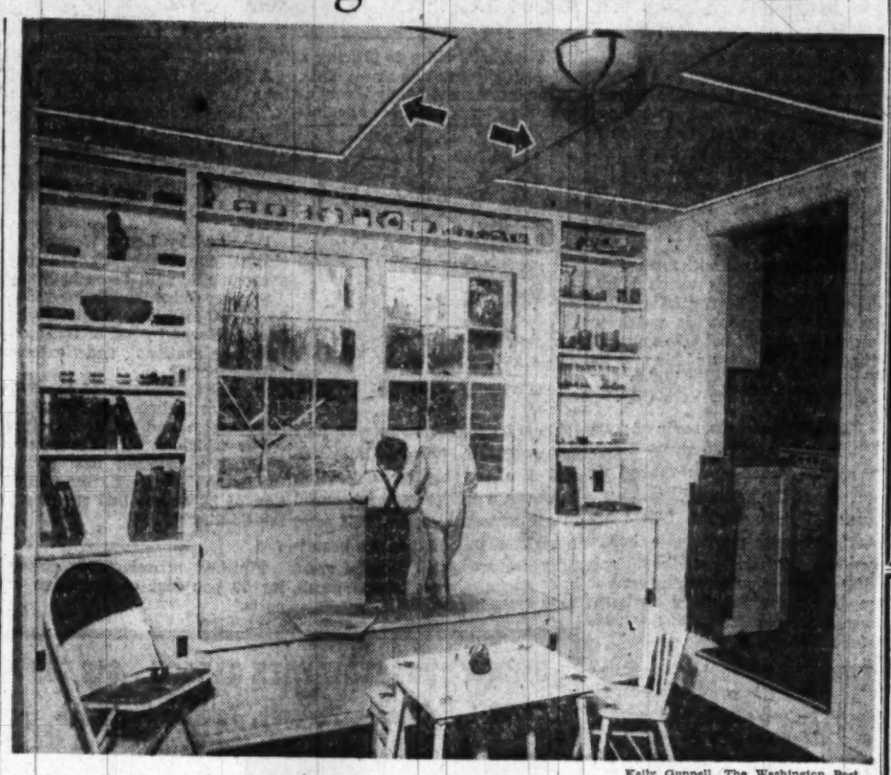
The baseboards are nearly always along outside walls, thus acting to shut off cold air before it can enter the room. Only a few feet of baseboard paneling was installed in interior walls in the Copley residence.

The Crane Co. panels come in 2-foot sections, 6 to 9 inches high, and are assembled in any desired length. The system can be installed in homes with or without basement.

Heat From Rubber!

BASEBOARD panels, heated by electricity instead of hot water, are manufactured by a Seattle firm. However, installations of various types in the past seven years have indicated that the system in inadvisable except in areas where cheap electricity is available.

Another new type of heating which is creating a local furor is ceiling panel in which the source of heat is a layer of electrically conducive rubber. Called "Uskon,"



Kelly Gunnell, The Washington Post.

Still another type of radiant heat is that from "Uskon" rubber panels seen here in the ceiling of a home in Woodacres, a Bethesda, Md., suburb. The owner commented, "there's no visible evidence of a heating system, but it's the most comfortable room in the house!"

the panels are a product of U. S. Rubber Co.

First local installation of "Uskon" was made last week in one room of a home in Woodacres, a Bethesda, Md. suburb. The owner had remodeled a section of his attached garage into an extra room. When the question of heating came up, the owner called Potomac Electric Co., which told him about "Uskon."

The ceiling plaster in the new room was removed and the rubber panels installed, painted and connected. "Works fine," the owner said this week. "There's no visible evidence of a heating system, but it's the most comfortable room in the house."

U. S. Rubber Co. officials describe their product as natural rubber to which has been added special materials permitting the conduction of electricity. The rubber provides a completely uniform heating surface over the entire area. There are no electrical wires within the panel other than the two aluminum foil potential leads to the layer. The rubber conducts electricity and provides the radiant heat.

In Dover, Mass.

Scientist Heats House By 'Mirrors'

DOVER, Mass., Dec. 11 (U.P.).—Dr. Maria Telkes, who heats her home without fire or furnace, says it's "done with mirrors."

Not exactly mirrors, but rather an 800-square-foot glass and metal device that traps the sun's rays for Dr. Telkes' five-room "solar house" in suburban Dover, 15 miles from Boston.

The rest of the heating system consists of a cheap chemical unit that Dr. Telkes developed in experiments at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

First of its kind, the pioneer model cost about $3000 to install. But Dr. Telkes expects it to operate virtually forever without additional expense while furnace-feeding householders continue paying an annual average of $150 for fuel.

Other Advantages

THERE are other benefits besides the end of fuel bills, she said. No fire hazards. No coal or oil shortages. No transportation tie-ups. And no coal-shoveling, ash-carrying or mechanical breakdowns.

Will the unit heat the house? Dr. Telkes thinks so, but isn't certain. To find out, she's living in the house for the winter, without any other source of heat.

It has been cozy thus far, but the scientist won't pronounce the experiment a success until she's been through the bitterest part of the winter.

From the heat trap built into the south side of Dr. Telkes' house, the solar warmth is conducted to a series of "heat bins."

Heat Stored Up

EACH BIN contains an inexpensive chemical compound known as sodium sulfate dekahydrate. When the chemical is warmed, it melts and absorbs heat. When it solidifies, it releases the heat.

A thermostatic control system is connected to each bin which in turn is hooked up to warm air registers. When the thermostat is adjusted to raise the house temperature, stored heat is released from the chemical and wafted into the rooms via the registers.

Dr. Telkes said the chemical can store heat for up to 10 days. Despite the possibility of long storms and overcast that might blot out the sun's rays for days; she says statistics show the heating unit will beat even a New England winter.

PUC to Hear Transit Route Change Pleas

A public hearing on several changes in service on Capital Transit Co. routes in Southeast Washington will be held by the District Public Utilities Commission January 24 at 10 a. m. in the District Building.

The hearing was scheduled after a request was received from the Garfield-Douglass Heights Citizens' Association for one extension of service and reports of rapid expansion in the section indicated other additions will be asked shortly.

The proposals to be considered are:

Route W-4, Portland st. bus line—Extend the line from the intersection of 11th pl. and Alabama ave. east along Alabama to 36th st. se. and then via the loop of the present C-2 bus terminal, south on 36th, west on Bangor st. and north on 34th st.

Route C-2, Shipley ter. bus line—Extend the present W-2 Shipley ter. line from the present terminal near the intersection of 25th st. and Naylor rd., north along Naylor, 25th and Pennsylvania ave. to Barney Circle.

Route W-2, Wheeler rd.-Trenton pl. bus line—Extend Route V-8, Wheeler rd. line from the present terminus at Raleigh pl. along Nichols ave., Portland st., 7th st., Alabama ave. to 11th pl., south to the present terminal of the Trenton pl. line and return over the regular route to the terminal on Raleigh pl. The V-8 line would then be discontinued as such and renamed W-2, Wheeler rd.-Trenton pl.

Under this setup W-2 and W-4 lines would provide adequate service so that Route C-2, 36th st. and Alabama ave. bus line would be discontinued.

$7 Billion Spent Since 1940 on Farm Building

American farmers have spent almost 7 billion dollars since 1940 in modernizing and replacing their homes and farm buildings, the Construction Information Committee stated Saturday.

"As a result, this decade has seen the greatest era of farm improvement in our history," it said.

"The farm building boom, which has brought a great advancement in living conditions and efficiency of farm operations, has grown to new annual peaks of more than a billion dollars in both 1947 and 1948. These totals, based on official Government estimates, are believed to be conservatively low.

"The big building program has been made possible by the record-breaking farm income, which has risen from 6.4 billion dollars in 1940 to 21.6 billion dollars for 1947.

"In this period, the farm population declined by about 10 per cent. Thus the farm construction record, in the face of the away-from-the farm movement, refutes the general opinion that high construction activity is dependent on population increase. It shows that, if the income level is sufficiently high, there is great construction activity."

City Inspection Isn't Supervision

Inspection of a house by a municipal building department representative does not mean that construction was supervised by the municipality nor is it a guarantee that specifications were followed.

Granting a certificate of occupancy after such inspection merely means that the builder has conformed to the local building code which sets up minimum standards for structural strength, fire safety and other factors. Codes do not guarantee quality of workmanship or materials.

Ownership of U. S. Homes at All-Time High

More American families own or are buying homes today than ever before, according to the United States Census Bureau, which estimates that 15,250,000 are homeowners.

This is 51.4 per cent of the Nation's 29,652,000 families living in cities, towns and villages, and is a 10.5 per cent increase since 1940, when 40.9 per cent of urban families owned their homes.

Of those now owning homes, 1,311,500 have annual incomes under $1000, 2,226,000 earn between $1000 and $2000, 3,400,750 from $2000 to $3000, 3,080,500 from $3000 to $4000, 5,220,750 have incomes above $4000.

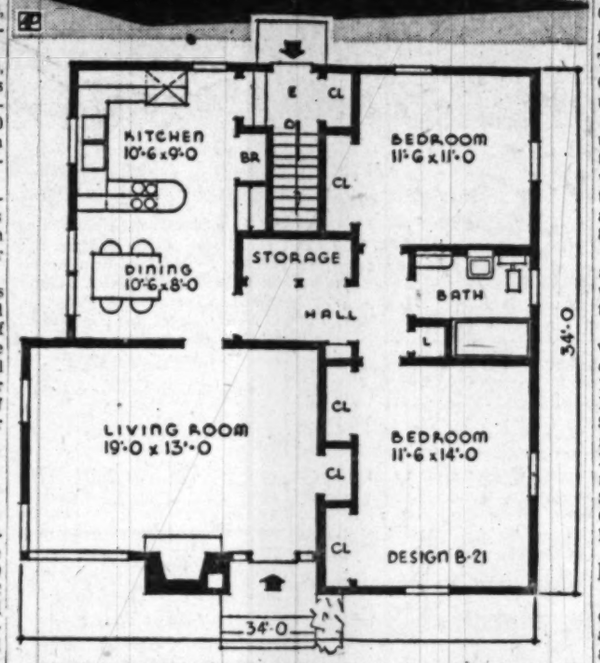
Of the estimated 14,402,000 families renting their living quarters today, 1,281,778 earn less than $1000, 3,413,274 earn $4000 or more.

An estimated 2,200,000 homes (700,000 new houses, 1,500,000 used houses) were sold in 1947. Of these, 858,000 or 39 per cent were bought by families with annual incomes under $3000. Eighty per cent of all homes sold in 1947 were priced under $10,000; 40 per cent under $5000.

Work to Begin Soon On 3 New Apartments

Construction is expected to begin shortly on erection of three apartment buildings to house 40 families at Minnesota ave. and C st. se. Charles E. Smith will build the rental project for Clyde Duvall, owner. It will be named Duvall Manor.

Little House, Big Closets



WHAT EVERY WOMAN WANTS—closet space—is featured in this house. In addition to large wardrobes in the bedrooms, there is a coat closet at each entrance, broom closet and storage cabinet in the kitchen, a linen closet and large storage space off the hall. The latter is 6x3 feet, large enough for storage of such items as sewing machine and golf bags. This plan, B-21, by the Small House Planning Bureau, St. Cloud, Minn., is adaptable for basement or slab construction. The cellar stairway space offers room for a heater. The house covers an area of 1084 square feet, and with a 7-foot 2-inch basement ceiling and 8-foot 3-inch first floor ceiling, it has a cubic content of 22,690 cubic feet. These figures can be used for local estimates

Construction Volume Shows Small Decline

New York, Dec. 11 (AP).—The F. W. Dodge Corp., reported today that contract dollar volume of building and construction in the 37 States East of the Rocky Mountains declined in November.

November awards in those States totaled $611,216,000. The Dodge Corp., a fact-finding organization for the building industry, said. This was a 22 per cent decline from October and a drop of 15 per cent under November, 1947.

Building and construction volume in the 37 Eastern States for the 11 months ended November 30 was up 22 per cent, however, over the first 11 months of 1947. Total awards for the 11 months were $8,835,595,000.

November declines appeared in all classes of building, with reverses in heavy engineering awards the most marked.

Nonresidential awards in November totaled $240,310,000, a drop of 24 per cent under October and 1 per cent under November, 1947. Residential awards, which totaled $264,033,000, were off 11 per cent from October and 9 per cent from November last year. Heavy engineering awards last month were $106,873,000, 35 per cent below October and 41 per cent under November, 1947.

Fires Confined

Fire departments in all sections often report a fire starting within a room, burning through the lath and plaster but never reaching the outer clapboard because the wall space was filled with fireproof mineral wool insulation.

Follow These 'Don't's to Cut Heating Bills

Now that many homes have been winter-conditioned to make them snug and warm, the advantage gained by closing cracks, installing storm-sash and insulating will be minimized unless homemakers cultivate fuel-saving habits carefully through the cold months. Here are some important suggestions by Government agencies and heating experts:

Set the thermostat no higher than 70 degrees. This is comfortable; 5 degrees higher wastes as much as 20 per cent of the fuel.

Don't keep doors open and hold long conversations with someone outside. For every minute a door is open the house cools 1 degree.

Don't obstruct radiators or warm air grills with furniture, draperies, dishcloths or drying laundry. Dust radiators regularly to permit maximum heat output.

Draw window shades at night, also in the daytime in very cold or windy weather.

Air the house only at mid-day when it is warmest outside; turn down the thermostat during that period.

Close fireplace damper tightly when the fireplace is not in use.

When bedroom windows are open at night, keep bedroom doors closed to prevent cold air circulating through the house. Bottoms of bedroom doors should be weatherstripped to seal the crack between door and floor.

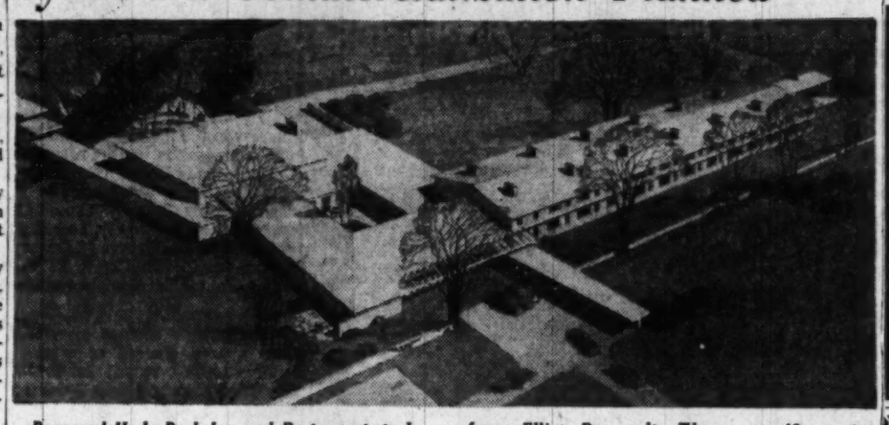
14-Acre Area Is Sold Near Heart of London

London, Dec. 11 (AP).—Fourteen acres near the heart of London have been sold in one of the largest property transactions of 1948.

The Marquess of Northampton was the seller, and Rawlstock Investments, Ltd., the purchaser. The price was not disclosed.

The property, which had belonged to Northampton family since 1594, contains 550 residential and 150 business properties.

Hyde Park 'Commercialization' Planned



Proposed Hyde Park Inn and Restaurant, to be erected at Hyde Park estate of former President Franklin D. Roosevelt, on land leased from Elliot Roosevelt. There are 48 guest rooms, designed in the architectural tradition of each of the 48 States

FACILITIES to house and feed the increasing flow of visitors to Hyde Park, President Roosevelt's New York estate, will be built next spring, it was revealed yesterday. Plans include an elaborate restaurant-inn and a group of service buildings, all to be erected on land in the Roosevelt estate leased from Elliott Roosevelt.

Promoters said the Roosevelt family will "retain a close affiliation with the entire project." The buildings will be located on Highway 9 opposite Roosevelt Memorial National Park, near Poughkeepsie, about 80 miles north of New York City.

Sponsors said more than 1,250,000 visitors have stopped at Hyde Park in the last 2½ years. The general plan for development of service buildings was outlined by President Roosevelt before his death, it is said.

In addition to use of the restaurant-inn by regular visitors, its facilities will be available to convention groups such as labor and fraternal organizations, historical societies and clubs.

The structure will embody latest improvements in building materials, planning techniques and equipment, according to Reisner & Urbahn, New York City architects.

The natural beauty of the rural woodland setting for which Hyde Park is noted will be undisturbed, while surrounding walks and terraces have been included in all landscaping plans. The building will be of wood and fieldstone construction, popular in the Hudson River Valley area.

The 48-room inn was planned so each room will recall distinctive features of the State for which it named. In addition to the individual State rooms, there will be a presidential suite with accommodation worthy of the Chief Executive.

Part of former President Roosevelt's collection of ship models and nautical prints will be housed in a nautical bar near the main entrance.

Michigan Man Has Formula On CarParking

The automobile parking problem, which plagues city officials and merchants throughout the country, was reduced to a mathematical formula yesterday by Floyd M. Jennings, planning director of the Grand Rapids (Mich.) City Planning Commission.

Jennings, whose commission has a municipal parking-lot system for 17,000 (partially completed) told members of the Highway Research Board Friday that a city needs .087 square feet of parking area for every dollar of annual gross retail sales of general merchandise, apparel and furniture.

The planning director said that urban places the size of Grand Rapids (250,000) can solve their central business district parking problem by providing the parking space needed, as indicated by his formula.

For the larger cities, he sees little hope at this time.

"Cities of a million people or more," he told the final session of the Highway Research Board, "cannot possibly solve the problem at present under existing urban land patterns."

The parking need formula, developed by Kenneth C. Welch, chairman of the commission of which Jennings is planning director, was derived through various surveys. These indicated how many daily transaction were made per dollar, how many people were involved per transaction, and how many shoppers there were per automobile.

Figures for parking turnover also were found, and data on all-day business and employe parking determined. Some of the factors may vary slightly in other communities, Jennings said, but the formula can be used pretty generally to indicate parking needs.

"Of course," admitted Jennings, "as soon as you provide parking for one more automobile, another person will drive in to shop."

Lady Astor's Birthplace Offered for Sale

Mirador, birthplace of Lady Astor near Charlottesville, Va., has been placed on the market at $330,000, according to Previews, Inc., marketing agents. The present owner, Mrs. Claude Lancaster of London is Lady Astor's neice.

The 474-acre farm and estates includes a 19-room brick Georgian residence built in 1825, a superintendent's house, 12 cottages and other buildings.

Mirador is best known, during recent years, as the house in which the five Langhorne sisters, Viscountess Astor, Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson, Mrs. Moncure Perkins, Mrs. M. B. Flynn and Mrs. Robert Brand were born.

During World War II many eminent Britishers were entertained there, including Ambassadors Lord Lothian and Lord Halifax and Field Marshall Sir John Dill. During Virginia Garden Week, the gardens have been open to the public.

Permits Issued For 86 Homes, 7 Apartments

District builders during November took out permits to erect 86 homes and 7 apartment houses, a seasonal drop from October's volume of 119 homes and 10 apartments. Dollar volume last month was $4,369,559 compared with October's $5,059,464.

However, the slight drop from October operations was still nearly $600,000 higher than volume reported for November, 1947, the District building inspector's report revealed.

A break down of living units provided for construction according to permits issued last month shows: Southeast, 94; Northeast, 51; Southwest, 90; and Northwest, 25.

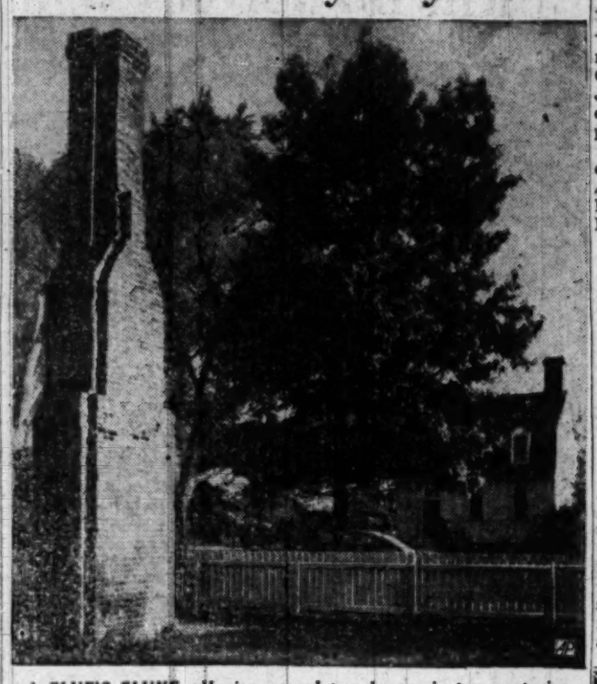
Fluorescent Lights Call for Expert

Fluorescent lighting should be chosen with the advice of a lighting expert, to avoid possible disappointment with this modern lighting in the home.

There are five types of fluorescent tubes. Under standard fluorescent, the color red loses vividness, while green, blue and white became yellowed. Soft white fluorescent makes red more vivid, blue takes on a lavender tint, white becomes pale pink.

Colors are "cooled" by 4500-degree fluorescent, which is best confined to bathrooms and kitchens. Daylight fluorescent makes red appear purple and has a tendency to make blond-finish furniture appear gray.

Houses May Come and Go, But This Chimney Stays On



A FLUE'S FLUKE—Having served two houses in two centuries it now will be used for a third in Williamsburg

WILLIAMSBURG, VA., Dec. 11 (AP).—A colonial chimney, which has been standing beside a Williamsburg street for almost two centuries and has outlived two houses, soon will be put to use again.

The old Lewis House, of which it once was a part, is being reconstructed on its original foundations as part of the new 10-million-dollar building program of colonial Williamsburg to "fill in the gaps" and bring the restoration of this historic city to completion.

The ancient chimney is located opposite the Williamsburg Inn entranceway. It is in good condition and has been a familiar landmark of this former colonial capital. The original Lewis House either burned or otherwise disappeared in the early days leaving the old chimney standing. A nineteenth century frame house, built on the foundations of the original dwelling, was removed about 10 years ago.

Reconstruction of the original Lewis House was begun recently. It will be a typical eighteenth century Williamsburg frame house of one-and-a-half stories. The grounds will be landscaped simply in accordance with known data of the original design and in the rear a small formal garden will continue the yard of the Orlando-Jones House immediately to the north.

Best Winter House Plants, Easy to Grow, Listed Here

By Alfred Putz

WITH the arrival of the winter season, house plants take the limelight. Their living green exerts a magical influence, and the hold is so strong that even decrepit specimens which could be replaced at nominal cost are often nursed along as if they were irreplaceable.

Agave, available in several forms, represents an important class of succulents. It includes the century plant, which, however, grows too large for home use. But there are several others of moderate height, and those with striped leaves usually are preferred.

Aglaonema, or Chinese evergreen, comes with plain and spotted leaves. They do not mind dim light and can stand a surprising degree of abuse. Older plants produce small greenish white inflorescenses in the spring, not unlike miniature callas.

Cast Iron Plant

Aspidistra needs no description. It is the cast-iron plant, and in addition to the green-leaved form there are others with spotted and striped foliage. Though they persist if neglected, they need rich soil and ample watering.

Dieffenbachia, popularly called dumb cane, or mother-in-law plant, is not so well known. They are at their best when not more than 30 inches tall, with larger plants that often become top heavy or unbalanced. There are mottled, striped and spotted varieties to choose from.

Dracaeana presents several other good species with rich green, white or yellow-spotted or cream-edged leaves.

Ficus elastica, the India rubber plant, and Ficus lyrata, the fiddle-leaf fig, are rather large plants. Many people consider them old fashioned, but that does not make them less desirable.

Sensitive to Gas

Hexline soleroli, known as baby's tears or Irish moss, has tiny round leaves thickly set along slender stems which trail not much beyond their reach of soil or the moist pot surface. It likes partial shade but is very sensitive to illuminating gas.

Monstera deliciosa is called philodendron pertusum by florists. Its common name is Mexican breadfruit and the natural holes in the large leaves are responsible for the name Swiss cheese plant. It can get along on comparatively little light.

Philodendron cordatum is universally known and appreciated for its rich green, heart-shaped leaves and graceful, pendant growth which may be tied to supports where that form is more desirable.

Climbing Plant

Nephthytis is a fairly recent acquisition, with arrow-shaped leaves on slender stems which may be made to climb on a support of cork.

Pandanus veitchi, the screw pine, with white stripes on its long arching leaves and short sharp spines along the margin, minds neither subdued light nor high temperatures; but do not neglect to keep the roots well supplied with water.

Last we have sansevieria, the snakeplant or bowstring hemp. Everybody knows how little care is needed to grow it well. Keep it rather dry, especially during the winter months.

Six New Dwellings

Six more dwellings in the Wheaton Hills subdivision at Wheaton, Md., are to be started soon by Ralph Ochsman. Sub bids are being taken on the basementless brick bungalows.

Quarters for Officers

Zerkle Construction Co. of Washington has been awarded a contract for erection of quarters for transient officers at the Bolling Air Force Base.

Realty Roundup

NAVAL CONSTRUCTION needs in time of warfare and organization of a group to handle such needs will be discussed Monday at the regular monthly luncheon meeting of the Washington Building Congress in the Sapphire Room of the Mayflower Hotel. Rear Admiral John J. Mannig is the main speaker. He will also tell of the Bureau of Yards and Docks efforts to streamline construction contract procedures.

The Building Congress' annual Christmas party is set for Wednesday evening at the Mayflower, according to J. R. Skinker, party chairman. Assisting him are George V. Graham, Louis Weller, H. A. Johns, M. C. MacKinnon, Claude Owen, R. E. Shaffer, Griffen Ritnour, Jack I. Bender, Hunter Harrison, Doran Platt, jr., F. F. Kueny and E. H. Keefe.

The Nation's savings associations appear assured of establishing a new record in 1948 mortgage loans on new homes, the United States Savings and Loan League reports. Volume the first nine months of this year is 25.3 per cent higher than the same period of 1947.

The National Real Estate Flyers Association is now in operation. About 60 flying realtors who attended the recent annual convention of the National Association of Real Estate Boards formed the group. Many brokers find that some salable properties are reached more easily and shown to better advantage by plane. Members elected to the board of directors include Richard D. Stimson of Washington.

House and Home Finance Agency, seeking to improve building codes, points out that administrative law and procedures in some cities make it too easy for municipal code officials to say "yes" as to say "no" to proposals to use new materials and construction methods. A Federal spokesman said so-called "performance codes" are a substantial advance over the specification or descriptive code. Instead of specifying that walls, for example, must be of masonry construction at least 8 inches thick, such codes give specifications on resistance to strain and stress, to fire and water, which gives more practical assurance as to soundness and safety, sanitation and welfare.

Construction activity last month remained at a high level despite a continuation of the seasonal decline which began in September, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reports. Downward trend resulted mostly from sharp drops in residential building and highway construction. At the same time, many types of nonresidential building either maintained the October dollar level or increased slightly in November.

Construction activity for the first 11 months of 1948, as measured by the 16.3 billion-dollar value of work put in place, is 29 per cent above that for the same period of 1947.

They Kill Off Garden Insects

Feeding Stations Keep Birds on Job All Winter

By Alfred Putz

BIRDS and gardens go together—and they belong together, too. If it were not for birds we might well be fighting a losing battle against insects, and with the right approach it is surprising to see how tame they become.

At times they may be annoying, taking pecks at the choicest cherries, strawberries, grapes and even tomatoes; but on the whole the damage is insignificant compared with the good they do. Keeping them in the garden or the neighborhood during the winter depends on their finding an adequate food supply when the natural fare runs out, and that is the reason why feeding them during winter has become a widespread practice among gardeners.

There are three important factors governing success. Start feeding early, keep it up and provide a varied assortment to attract as many species as possible.

Special feeders have their value in that they protect the birds as well as the food. There are many designs, some for the outside window shelf, others to be hung from tree branches, still others for fastening to tree trunks or the top of posts. The roofed vane type, which protects the open end of the feeder by turning it in the opposite direction from the prevailing wind, is especially serviceable.

Several feeders are better than a single one, if for no other reason than that they give the more timid birds a chance to eat in peace at one feeder while blue jays and other quarrelsome birds are monopolizing another.

Vary the Menu

THOUGH many birds prefer feeding on the ground, they will soon change their habit when they find out where an ever-present supply of food is available. The feeding stations need not be expensive but they should be substantial.

What to feed deserves careful consideration especially where the gardener is interested in attracting the rarer birds. Seed mixtures are the basis, with millet, canary and other grasses as well as oats, wheat and cracked corn making up the bulk of the commercial products. Sunflower seed is especially attractive to cardinals, chickadees, nuthatches, many kinds of finches and blue jays. All seed mixtures should contain a small quantity of grit, which is urgently needed for proper digestion.

Peanut hearts are also very important for they have a special appeal to many insect eaters. They provide fat and may be given in the form of peanut butter smeared into rough-barked tree trunks. Suet is indispensable, but it should be placed vertically on the ground or in the snow. Fatty table scraps serve the same purpose as suet, and bits of meat on them are by no means despised by many birds.

Robins, thrushes and catbirds go strongly for raisins, chopped apples, nutmeats, cake crumbs and even small pieces of doughnuts. Yes, even cheese is welcome by catbirds and mocking birds. Bits of lettuce, oatmeal (cooked or raw) and other breakfast foods are pounced upon with enthusiasm.

Beware Gluttons

SOME birds experts contend that piling the feeder up with all the food it will hold is not desirable. They advise putting out a little less than the amount consumed each day and replenishing it at the same hour every day, asserting that the birds will be waiting for it at the same hour. This may mean a saving in food but most gardeners will not have the time to adhere to the schedule, and how can one be sure that the birds will not foresake the garden for one where they never have to wait?

The question of drinking water is easily solved when the weather is above freezing but becomes a real problem during severe cold spells. We are likely to see electrically heated units one of these days, if they are not on the market already, but in the meantime it is a matter of putting out once or even twice a day a fairly large container with hot water, which will take longer to freeze than a smaller one. Punctuality is an important factor, so that the birds will learn when to look for the fresh supply.

Gardeners who planted their gardens with birds in mind probably will have included a fair number of berry or fruit-bearing shrubs and trees to supplement the feeder fare. Where the area is not built up solidly, there also should be a fair supply of natural foods standing above the snow, among them the seed stalks of such common nuisance plants as burdock, lamb's quarter, evening primrose, yellow foxtail and even the fruits of poison ivy and poison oak.

Williamsburg Flower Show To Start Feb. 28

Williamsburg, Va., Dec. 11.—The third annual Colonial Williamsburg Garden and Flower Symposium, to be held here February 28 through March 4, will feature a new and broadened program for garden lovers, it was announced by Colonial Williamsburg sponsors.

The program will include talks by experts in their fields, discussion periods and exhibits with the 60 acres of eighteenth century gardens of this restored city as a working laboratory. Individual problems and needs in garden design, planting and maintenance will be given special attention during the five-day session.

The symposium will be open to amateur and professional alike. The previous two symposiums attracted registrants from all over the country and were particularly popular with garden club members.

Pent-Up Demand Swamps Cement Makers

struction costs are still high—double or more prewar. Cement men are not anxious to load themselves down with high cost production facilities to meet a demand that never again may be so high.

The other is basing point. That's complicated. Last April the Supreme Court upheld an order by the Federal Trade Commission forbidding cement makers to quote fixed prices as of some city selected as a basing point. Producers, regardless of the location of their plant, quoted the same price at the basing point, paying the freight themselves.

The ruling meant they had to quote prices f.o.b. at their plant with the customer paying the freight.

Other industries, notably steel, abandoned their own basing point price systems and started selling f.o.b.

Right now the whole problem is being reviewed by a special Congressional Committee and the Federal Trade Commission with the likelihood that Congress will be asked to legislate business out of the tangle.

Old Customers Favored

So—point two—cement makers don't want to build plants until they find out the best place to build them from the standpoint of transportation and prices.

The uncertainty has added to local shortages. Cement makers are taking care of their oldest and nearest customers first. When the insistant pressure of shortage is over, they want an established market of satisfied users. Distant customers suffer.

If a local mill can't supply local demand, two things usually happen. The customer buys all he can locally, and then goes to a distant mill and pays higher freight charges for the remainder. Or the local mill raises its price to a point just below the price plus freight of its nearest competitor.

That makes it tough on the contractor bidding on a job without knowing exactly what his cement cost might be. And some contractors report cement makers with a virtual local monopoly sometimes get pretty sticky about delivery terms.

Vepco Building In Alexandria Up for Sale

Virginia Electric & Power Co. has put up for sale its three-story and basement office building at the northwest corner of Washington and Prince sts., Alexandria. If a suitable offer is received, Vepco will move out by April 1, said J. W. Howard, Vepco vice president.

Completion of Vepco's million dollar service building on a five-acre tract on Old Glebe rd., near Parkfairfax, will make the downtown building surplus to its needs. The new structure is expected to be ready for occupancy soon.

The service building will facilitate extension and maintenance of Vepco's service in nearby Virginia, Howard declared. The structure is modern in every detail and harmonizes with surrounding garden type apartment developments.

When completed, the building will house all activities now carried on in several rented buildings in different parts of Alexandria, Howard said.

The new two-story service center will house the storeroom and loading platform for 16 construction trucks and will contain modern locker and assembly rooms for more than 100 service personnel.

The garage and transformer repair shops will be in a separate building on the five acre site. Engineering, accounting and general office personnel now at the company's general office building on South Washington st., Alexandria, will occupy the second floor of the new quarters.

The company will continue to maintain local business offices in Alexandria, Arlington and Fairfax for the convenience of customers, Howard reported.

New Pricing System Causing Confusion

should be clarified so small business won't be hurt. There's no question that the law needs further explaining, however."

Joseph H. Deckman, president of R. Robinson, Inc., building supply firm at 2301 Pennsylvania ave. se., agreed with the Senator that the small businessman was taking a financing licking from the decision.

In a letter to Senator Capehart, Deckman told how his firm lost its source of cement supply, the Green Bag Cement Co. of Pittsburgh, when the latter withdrew from the Washington market.

Prior to April 26, said Deckman, the Pittsburgh concern absorbed part of the Pittsburgh-to-Washington freight costs so their prices would be on a par with those charged here by manufacturers nearer to Washington.

Distant Manufacturers Lose Market

However, with Deckman's firm paying the freight charges, the resulting price is higher than that charged by producers in Maryland and West Virginia and customers patronize firms with the lower prices, he said.

Cut off from his main source of supply, Deckman found it a hopeless task to try and affiliate with other cement companies. They do not wish to take on more customers and increase their supply problems, he wrote.

"Also, some companies with high freight rates wish to ship cement and mortar into Washington, but due to the legal ruling, are forced out of competition because they dare not meet the local price of cement mills near the Washington market," Deckman added.

He pointed out to The Washington Post that all cement prices jumped when the Supreme Court ruling went into effect. He paid a Martinsburg, W. Va., firm $3.09 a barrel last March and now pays $3.30. The few shipments received from the Green Bag Co. at Pittsburgh now cost $3.58 per barrel in contrast to $2.91 in January before the decision, he reported. Although cement prices increased 18c in two months before the decision, the big jump occurred after April 26.

Deckman told Senator Capehart that a secondary effect of the ruling was to cause an immediate jump in the price quoted by the cement companies at their mills. They did this to reap the benefit of their local monopolies and to cushion themselves against unforeseen business conditions caused by the ruling, he explained.

"From the small businessman's standpoint, the ruling has worked another financial hardship," Deckman continued. "All freight is now shipped collect. This means an increase in working capital as the building supply and hardware businesses have 30-day terms of sale to the trade. Therefore, large sums must be paid out upon arrival of merchandise and collected for from 30 to 60 days later.

Prices Must Seek Level

"It is my observation that the Supreme Court has increased monopolies by its ruling and is stifling competition by making it illegal for a company to sell its merchandise where and at whatever price it pleases in order to meet competition," he continued.

"The basing point system is not collusion, but an orderly result of free competition. No one can sell a similar material in a great competitive industry such as the building industry without offering it at the going price. As a result, all materials are forced down to where their price becomes constant as based on a central section of efficient manufacture."

In a discussion of the basing point squabble, Senator Capehart told this reporter that no businessman he has talked with wants to return to F.O.B. pricing or to a system where a manufacturer makes money on freight charges, in addition to manufacturing profits.

The problem is, Senator Capehart said, "Is it legal for a seller to absorb all or part of freight costs in order to lower the cost of his product to meet competition?"

Most witnesses heard by his subcommittee, he continued, feel that the seller should be allowed to absorb the actual freight charges to distant points if he so desires, but that it should be illegal to add "phantom freight" costs in sales in his immediate locality. The latter practice is done in order to present a uniform sales price to all customers from a given basing point.

Senator Invites Further Testimony

Senator Capehart said his subcommittee expects to hold further hearings in January, at which time Secretary of Commerce Sawyer and certain union officials would be asked to testify.

"Unless something is done to clarify the ruling and let business know where it stands," he said, "ghost towns will appear in America as manufacturers move their plants nearer to their raw material source or customers, or both. It could change the map of America. Pennsylvania has already advertised in trade journals inviting industry to settle there. If plants moved from Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky, for example, think of the loss for those states.

"I definitely am in favor of legislation to straighten out this mess so the little man won't get hurt. If the ruling benefited anyone that would be different, but all testimony indicates that prices are higher."

Senator Capehart issued a blanket invitation to any business man or builder to come before his subcommittee and tell his story.

Sand, Snow and Serf Send Up a Cry That's Hard to Resist

Accommodations are more plentiful, prices are leveling off and the scenery is just what it's been been for years—refreshing. So it must be winter vacation time. The picture on the left—naturally entitled A girl, A Horse and a Rope—was taken out in the Southwest. The one above might be called Three Girls With But a Single Suit. At any rate, it's a scene on one of those Florida beaches, and can it really be like that? At right, young lady pauses to nudge her locks and take aboard some of that brisk air in the ski and toboggan belt

Miami Is Betting Against The Yankee Weatherman

Special to The Washington Post

MIAMI, Dec. 11.—An itinerant guava-mangler, with family connections in Bucks County, Pa., and Swampoodle, D. C., has been noising it about that the East is enjoying a halcyon autumn.

(The East is that part of the North between the Atlantic Ocean and the Alleghenies. It extends southward to Valdosta, Ga., and is not to be confused with the East Coast, which is a copyrighted attribute of Florida.)

The East, says this pulp-stained artisan, is basking in 50 and 60-degree temperatures. It has been so mild that double pneumonia cases in the East can still obtain cot room in hospital corridors and his great aunt in Maryland is beginning to have visions of getting through the winter on 12 tons of coal.

Lolling in the shade of our cabana canopy, and letting our eyes rove the vast expanse of blue ocean, white sand and golden brown epidermis, we have time to marvel at the durability of hope in the human breast. Those Northerners must know by now that such freakish weather can't last. Just how many feet of soot-sullied snow does it take to drive a frost-bitten Yankee to the nearest Pullman window?

Florida, at least, isn't deceived. The first fugitives from an electric blanket are already down here, polishing up their faded Atlantic City tans, and before another leaf falls from the calendar the die-hards will be fighting the hobos for the privilege of riding the rods on a southbound freight.

Everybody Has Dough

SERIOUSLY, the transportation outlook is much better this season. You needn't slip some shady character the down payment on a Diesel engine to get a lower to Florida.

It's an excellent idea, of course, to make early reservations both ways, and to avoid such all-bets-off dates as December 23 and 24 and 30 and 31. Fridays, also, are heavy days.

An inflationary phenomenon this year is the demand for bedrooms and drawing rooms. Every other southbound traveler seems to want privacy, and even a lower berth won't satisfy him.

Additional cars, and a slight decline in reservations, both mean more space this year. And beginning December 15, it will cost speculators money to hog berths until train time. They must surrender reservations three days in advance to get a full refund.

The airlines will have space for 1250 Florida passengers a day at the peak of the season, a considerable increase over last year. But if you pick Christmas Eve, or insist on a three-hour luxury liner, you'll just have to queue up, of course.

As for bus travel, the Greyhound System will be able to accommodate 2266 Florida passengers a day.

Motels Mushroom

FOLKS who aren't in so much of a hurry, and who like to keep the family crate parked at the front door, should have no greater problem than choosing between tourist cabins resembling Indian tepees and swank motor courts with room service, cocktail lounges and swimming pools. The State now has 1800 motor courts—650 of them built in the past year—with 28,000 rooms.

Also less than a year old are 255 hotels, giving the State 1550 hotels with 86,000 rooms and ranging from one built of driftwood to the plushy skycrapers of Miami Beach. Then there are the many apartment houses catering to transients, and the countless rooms for rent in private homes.

Rates are about the same as last season. Apartments and houses could be had for as little as $700 for the six-month season beginning November 1, and you are asked to shell out a matter of $40 a day for some rooms in Miami Beach's ocean-front hotels. Food prices are up a notch, as they are everywhere, but you can still get an adequate dinner for $1.50. You can also find, without straining, restaurants that charge $10 for filet mignons and 50 cents for a cup of coffee, but that's you and your purse. Hang on to your return ticket.

But let's go into this thing city by city. We won't do it alphabetically, because Miami says it was here first:

MIAMI-MIAMI BEACH

FIFTEEN hundred new hotel rooms, and about 75 new apartment houses with 800 living units, are available in Dade County. Two of the hotels are so new that they haven't yet been named.

The Miami Beach hotel owners have adopted a new policy of dividing the year into five periods for simultaneous rate changes. It doesn't set the rates; merely fixes a uniform system of seasonal changes. The periods are: November 1-December 15, preseason; December 15-January 15, holiday season; January 15-April 1, peak winter season; April 1-May 1, spring season; May 1-November 1, summer season.

Hotel rates range from as low as $7 a day, even during the Hialeah racing, to the aforementioned $40 a day on the ocean front. As for food, three new elaborate but moderately priced cafeterias are open in the Lincoln Road area of Miami Beach, and two in downtown Miami. The champagne-and-caviar bistros sock you just what you'd expect.

Greyhound racing opened November 15 at the Biscayne Kennel Club, Miami, and will continue through May 31. Horse racing dates are: Tropical Park at Coral Gables, December 1-January 15; Hialeah, January 17-March 3; Gulfstream Park, March 4-April 19.

You can get in on a fishing party at $3.50 a

Tows Give Skiers A Down Hill Life

WHAT'S the first thing you think of when skiing is mentioned? A lath-like young dasher on skis? Some fool making one of those towering jumps? A shapely lass in a tight sweater perhaps? Whatever it is, you aren't in it with the people who have ideas for a price.

A man in Boise, Idaho, for example, gives his publicity-wise typewriter its head, and this comes out: "Idaho—the land that nature forgot to smooth over—is preparing these days for one of the greatest skiing and winter sports seasons in years."

The Sun Valley publicity mill comes up with this one: "France's great ski champion, Emile Allais, will teach this season at Sun Valley,

Old Town's Face Is Newly Aged

TIMES have changed and progress goes on apace—sometimes where it might be least expected. Thus it is that seasoned travelers, who only a year or so ago could enchant any handy gathering with detailed descriptions of restorations in historic Williamsburg, Va., would hardly recognize the old place as it is today.

Odd as it sounds, "new" eighteenth century buildings have risen to fill gaps of the restored colonial area recently to such an extent that the face of the town is changed. But it is changed only in that it now more nearly approaches the original home of Virginia's forefathers.

head, or you can charter a 40-foot boat and crew for the same fishing at $65 a day.

The night clubs are booking Broadway names, as usual, but some are considering setting a ceiling on entertainers' salaries and passing on the saving to nondrinking patrons. Generally, however, night spot tabs will run about the same as last year.

The big splash at Miami Beach this year will be the December 23 opening of the new one-million-dollar Copa City, designed by Norman Bel Geddes to replace the club which burned last spring. The formal opening of this lavish nitery will be on New Year's Eve.

Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis, Frances Langford and the Vagabonds are the stars for the opening of the Miami Beach Beachcomber December 23. The Ink Spots and Ted Lewis' band will open the Monte Carlo in Miami December 21. And Hildegarde is expected to be passing out posies at one of the local spots before the season gets past the aperitif stage.

Miami Beach's participation in the Orange Blossom Festival will include a mile-long parade of 1949 fashions on Lincoln Road December 29. Ten models on each of 20 moving stages will display new creations of the Nation's leading designers, from bathing suits to wedding dresses.

Apart from the bars and bangtails, Miami is working this season to emphasize its natural attractions. The new Everglades National Park gets the spotlight, of course, but Dade County wants visitors to know it is spending the proceeds of a two-million-dollar bond issue to improve its 3520-acre park system. The major project is Haulover Beach Park north of Miami Beach, which will have a mile and half of ocean frontage, 10 types of thrill rides in an amusement park for children and parking space for 20,000 cars.

Everglades Park, dedicated a year ago, is accessible by auto and cabin cruiser. The Greyhound Bus Lines run one-day tours from their Miami terminal Sundays and Wednesdays, at $15 a person, and in January the National Audubon Society will resume its $27 two-day tours by station wagon and cabin cruiser, including a night at the Tavernier Hotel on Key Largo. The Audubons will concentrate on the rookeries of the egret and other rare birds, but sightseers as well as ornithologists are welcome.

The Greyhound tours include stops at Miami's parrot and monkey jungles.

PALM BEACH

THE cooperative apartment idea is invading Palm Beach as a "home away from home" for the winter resort traveler. The new Lake Drive Apartment project, to be completed early next spring, will comprise 24 housekeeping suites, each of them owned by the occupant.

The project is on Lake Worth at Australian ave. and Lake dr. The 3½ to 5½-room suites will have private terraces overlooking the lake.

The Hotel Mayflower, also on Lake Worth, was the first of the large water-front hotels to announce its opening for the season. It has been completely redecorated during the summer, and its entertainment will feature name bands and Broadway stars. Its swimming pool has a terrace for outdoor dining and dancing, day and night.

TAMPA

TAMPA is Florida's industrial capital, commercial distribution center and convention city—a combination which gives it year-round stability. Consequently, apartments can be had at $60 for one bedroom and $75 for two. Hotel rates range from $3 single and $5 double, and apartment hotel rates begin at $85.

There has been a lot of building in Tampa since the war, but reservations are still advisable.

Tampa's attractions include the Dupree Gardens, 900 acres of tropical trees, plants and flowers; Tampa University, with its Moorish architecture and its museum, and the DeSoto Oak, where the explorer landed on his way to the Mississippi. There are also dozens of cigar factories, which welcome visitors who want to see how their Havanas are made.

ST. PETERSBURG

JUST across the Gandy Bridge and causeway from Tampa, St. Petersburg has attained a new sort of eminence in the past two years with its Academy of Charm, a school operated by the city to teach poise and posture, makeup and hair care, personality development, voice and ballet, diet and clothes selection—all the ingredients of that complex quality, charm. Faculty members include a Ziegfeld Follies graduate, and 200 girls are enrolled.

"St. Pete" has its scenic beauties, too, and it specializes in outdoor recreation. There's always a sailboat race, a powerboat regatta, a rifle shoot or a golf tournament on tap, and the resort is famous for its national championship tournaments in shuffleboard, lawn bowling, horseshoes, chess and checkers.

SARASOTA

SEVENTEEN motels, motor courts and trailer camps have been built during the summer in Sarasota, winter quarters of the Ringling circus, and an entire village of modern houses has been completed to house winter visitors to this West Coast city.

The John and Mabel Ringling Home and Museum of Art is a top tourist attraction in Sarasota. It remains as it was when the Ringlings lived there, even to the gold-plated bathroom fixtures. The board of governors of the museum has purchased additional paintings to hang with the old masters left by the Ringlings.

Cabanas on Lido Beach rent for $180 a season, and include a large main room, two dressing rooms, running water and lounging chairs. Renters can redecorate, if they wish. A tropical dining patio is a new addition this year.

ORLANDO

THIS lake city in the heart of the rolling citrus region is a pleasant surprise to those who think of Florida as a dazzling expanse of white sand. There are 42 lakes within its boundaries, and great live oaks draped with Spanish moss stud the gentle hills.

Water sports, of course, are high on the list of activities, but the terrain is ideal for horseback riding, and there are several riding academies. And for a real thrill, the lover of horse-flesh can participate in the winter harness racing trials on the Florida Livestock Exposition track.

FORT LAUDERDALE

WHAT sets Fort Lauderdale apart from other Florida resorts is that it is a New World Venice, with 10 per cent of its incorporated area water surface. New River, flowing through the heart of the city with its north and south forks; Middle River, New River Sound, the Intracoastal Canal and 90 miles of artificial waterways are used almost as much as the city streets.

Naturally, this makes Fort Lauderdale a great yachting center, but its picturesqueness appeals to visitors who never board a boat. It is also the home of a major big game fishing fleet, with a Deep Sea Fishing Tournament one of the highlights of its winter sports program. The Intracoastal Waterway, extending from Canada to Key West, brings the city a thousand or more Northern yachts every winter.

DAYTONA BEACH

A PRIVATE home on the ocean is placed within the reach of almost any income by Daytona's Ocean Front Cottage Colony, stretching along the Atlantic for nearly 4 miles. There are nearly 2000 units, for large and small families, and at varying rates, with a large number in the medium-price range.

Each unit is completely furnished and equipped, and has tile bath and all-electric kitchen. They are convenient to stores and restaurants, and not distant from the night clubs and other centers of resort activity. The famous beach, 23 miles long and 500 feet wide at low tide, remains the No. 1 attraction, and offers many amusements in the form of sand sailers, beach buggies and motorettes. Or you can drive your car on the hard-packed sand along the water's edge.

FORT MYERS

BOATING and fishing are the leisurely pursuits of this Tamiami Trail city just 20 minutes by auto from the Gulf of Mexico. Fort Myers is on the Caloosahatchee River, and tarpon, king of game fish, are caught in nearby waters the year 'round. There are plenty of guides, boats and fishing tackle, and tourist accommodations are plentiful and inexpensive. There are no cabarets.

Charm School grad, Jeanne Crow, enjoys a refreshing dip in the clear blue waters of the Gulf of Mexico at St. Petersburg

Don't Take the Wrap—Hie South

WITHIN a few days additional de luxe schedules will be provided, making it possible to reach resort areas of the South by rail and air, with utmost speed, and yet with comforts designed to make one wish the trip had lasted longer.

Two railroads operating between Washington and points South have announced special trains to accommodate pre-holiday vacationers. At the same time two of the airlines flying South have announced additional flights for those who wish to exchange the hurly-burly of business for a brief bask on some breezy beach.

Seaboard Airline Railroad's all-Pullman winter train, the "Orange Blossom Special," will resume December 15, leaving Washington at 6:05 p. m. on that day and daily thereafter. It will arrive in Miami at 3:15 p. m. the following day.

Section, roomette, bedroom, compartment and drawing-room accommodations, as well as dining car and lounge buffet service will be afforded on the diesel-powered, air-conditioned train.

This will be the famed winter train's twenty-third consecutive season.

Atlantic Coast Line Railroad will inaugurate through-Pullman service from Washington to Miami, Tampa, Sarasota and St. Petersburg and service to Central and West Coast Florida on December 15.

Departing Union Station here at 7 p. m., the train arrives at all Florida destinations in mid-afternoon of the following day with every mile of Florida travel in daylight.

And, again, there will be provided the renowned variety of Pullman accommodations, lounge and observation cars and dining cars.

The Florida Special schedule will go into effect December 15, when the crack all-Pullman train will leave Union Station at 5:25 p. m. on the first of its daily wintertime runs, to arrive in Miami at 2:40 p. m. the following day.

Combination Pullman and reserved-seat coach trains will leave at 12:05 p. m. on December 17 and December 23.

Accommodations for over 4000 additional passengers will be available for winter vacationists flying between here and Miami and Miami Beach from December 15 to January 10, Harrison Knapp, local traffic and sales manager for Eastern Air Lines, announces.

Knapp said Eastern will add 60 extra flights during the 27-day period to handle the demand of southbound passengers. The additional planes to be added will operate from Boston, New York and here to the Florida resort cities.

Four-engine, New Type Constellations and 56-passenger DC-4's and twin-engine, 21-passenger DC-3 airplanes will be used on the extra sections.

National Airlines has "exceptionally heavy" bookings for December 22, 23 and 24 and will run as many extra sections as possible, depending upon the amount of equipment available.

Florida Offers Juicy Welcome

MOTORISTS visting Florida this year will find the welcome mat out, a cordial hand extended—and in it, a glass of fresh citrus juice.

Citrus juice is to Florida what the mint julep is to Kentucky. Motorists entering Florida will receive free orange and grapefruit juice—all a thirsty traveler can drink—at scenic roadside refreshment booths. The first booth will be in operation on U. S. Highway No. 1 for the first heavy flow of seasonal traffic.

Four other spots on main roads into Florida have been selected for the citrus stops and are expected to be in operation by the first of the year. Besides dispensing citrus juice, the booths will serve as information centers about Florida. Booklets and pamphlets will be distributed.

How to Get Healthy in a Night Club

By Victor Kalman

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Dec. 11 (U.P.).—Orlo A. Bartholomew sipped a Bourbon Manhattan, breathed deeply of what he said was germless air and opined there was nothing like getting healthy in a night club.

The club—the glass-inclosed Sun and Star Roof atop Atlantic City's Senator Hotel, which Bartholomew owns—probably is the only night spot which offers bubble baths with gin rickeys.

It was conceived by Bartholomew, who became a hotel owner accidentally three years ago after making and losing several fortunes as a banker, timber operator, railroad man and builder of a machine which was a forerunner of the bulldozer.

"On the coldest winter day in Atlantic City, this room will be just like the beach at Miami. People in these parts won't have to go South to get tan," he said, hopefully.

85 in Daytime

DAYTIME, it is 85 degrees in the Sun and Star Roof. A $40,000 battery of ultra-violet, infra-red and plain spotlights shine down on the room, which overlooks the ocean and all the city. The ultra-violet lamps are credited with killing air-borne bacteria. The infra-reds provide the heat. The spotlight insures madame a natural color under the lamps.

The roof is equipped with a bubble bath, a massage room, heat cabinets and various gadgets designed to make monsieur and madame thin, effortlessly and painlessly. Also to take their minds off the night before.

Night-time, the room is like many night clubs, "except," said Bartholomew, "there are few, if any, germs."

Bartholomew, who is susceptible to colds, decided to install germicidal lamps after he found that three he uses in his office and others adorning his bedroom and bath appeared to prevent him from getting so much as a sniffle last winter. He produced a batch of testimonials from Senator guests who also swear by the lamps.

Truman's Idea

A STANCH Republican, he grudgingly admitted he got the idea after President Truman equipped the White House with similar germ killers.

Perhaps because he once was ill, Bartholomew takes health projects seriously. Recently, he wrote to officials in many cities suggesting they install germicidal lamps in subways, trolleys and buses to prevent possible epidemics.

Another pet project which consumes much of his time is the movement to build a national park on Brigantine Island, about 1000 feet across Absecon Channel from Atlantic City.

California Group's Booklet Goes Fast

Among the unusual attempts to attract tourists is that of the Redwood Empire Association of California.

The association issued a folder for tourists who travel in their own airplanes, showing all airports and vacation attractions near these airports, as well as technical data. The first 10,000 copies were gone in 20 days, and the booklet is now in its fourth edition for a total of 100,000 copies.

Ski "Cartoonist" Warren Miller executes a difficult jump on Baldy Mountain at Sun Valley, Idaho, where snows already have piled up 16 inches on the Sawtooth Range

Looks Like a Record Season for Skiers

Idaho. This announcement touches off the powder keg of skiing."

The Harrisburg, Pa., man eschews the fast one and figures he'll fool 'em with slow stuff, curves and sinkers, viz: "Pennsylvania's winter sports resorts are readying themselves for the 1948-49 season and from reports received . . . indications are that the season will be one of the best in history."

THE PENNSYLVANIA report goes on to say that one resort has spent $30,000 and another $15,000 ski-wise for improvements since last year. Accommodations also are available at a score of State forest parks, where cabins may be rented at nominal fees. The annual Pennsylvania ski championships will be held at Laurel Mountain Slopes, near Logonier, probably late next month.

IN IDAHO we find that 15 major ski areas are ready for operation in what the Gem State insists on calling its "cold war." These include interesting-sounding places like Bogus Basin, Magic Mountain, Teddy Bear, Bear Gulch, Willow Creek and Gibbons Pass. Also this season will be held the annual Ashtion (Idaho) Dog Derby, a real honest-to-gosh dog-sled race with a first prize of $1000

BANFF will hold its annual winter carnival the second weekend in February. This will include ski competitions, ski-joring, ice skating, nightly dances, slalom races, snowshoe races and broom-ball games, whatever they are. The new Cascade Hotel in Banff is opening up any day now and a new chair lift at Mount Norquay will be inaugurated at the start of the season. Sunshine, Skoki and Temple Ski Lodges in the high Lake Louise country also are preparing to handle from 25 to 50 guests at a time. Mount Assiniboine Lodge, 7000 feet up on the continental divide, is about 10 hours' ski-tour from Sunshine Lodge. Although accommodations have been expanded in Banff, "it is a wise skier who will make advance reservations."

UP IN MASSACHUSETTS, where the Red Sox moan, there are 67 ski areas operating, 7 of which are brand-new facilities—those at Amesbury, Ashfield, Ashby, Barre, Beverly and Waltham. These are in alphabetical order, as you can see. One major development, Jiminy Peak on the Hancock-Lanesboro rd., boasts a new 2100-foot Alpine T-bar lift and three rope tows. Most of the winter sports developments are concentrated in the Berkshire Hills, where the heaviest snowfall generally is recorded and where the season holds on almost as late as in more northerly sectors.

NEW YORK STATE is opening the season with 48 ski centers, 15 of them brand new. The largest cluster, 18 in all, is in the northern section of the State, which includes the Adirondacks. Among the new centers are the State-sponsored development on Whiteface Mountain near Wilmington and one on Oak Mountain at Speculator. Both have T-bar lifts 3000 feet long and several down-mountain trails. The southern area has three centers at Walton, Austerlitz and Livingston Manor. In the Taconic country on the east side of the Hudson there are centers at Hillsdale, Fahnestock State Park and Beacon. Represented in the Catskills are Highmount, Phoenicia, Pine Hill and East Jewett. The Long Island center at Bethpage State Park is the southernmost in the State.

IN COLORFUL QUEBEC, where lives Lucky Pierre, the mightiest ski jumper in the north country, we find word that "good things very often come about as if by chance." There's some more leisurely material like this, but it all boils down to the fact that prior to the first ski-tow in the world—established at Shawbridge, Quebec, in 1931—a skier spent 95 per cent of his time climbing back up. In fact, there's an old wheeze which says the Indian's description of skiing is: "Whoosh—walk back up." The ski-tow now enables him to spend 90 per cent of his time going downhill.

Anyway, Quebec's Lac Beauport area ski facilities rank with the most complete and extensive in North America. Nearby tower Ste. Anne, scene of the 1947 Canadian Downhill, Slalom and jumping ski championships, is another excellent spot. The Quebec City district is situated 180 miles down the St. Lawrence below Montreal (this means it's 180 miles up north'rd from Montreal). The city is only a day's journey by train from New York.

IN SUN VALLEY, where the powder keg was sputtering when last seen, we find that snow has fallen copiously already. The season opens on December 18 and the 11,005-foot ski lift on Mount Baldy will be ready to operate. Sun Valley is offering "Learn to Ski" weeks through January and pickup again in April. Among special events at the Union Pacific's fabulous resort will be the eighth annual Western Interstate Ski Meet in January and the Harriman Cup events on March 26 and 27.

Eight States In National Family

Wilson, N. C., Dec. 11.—Eight States in the Nation will have representation in the National Family Basketball Tournament to be held here at Atlantic Christian College December 28, 29, 30.

The Clark twins of Huntington, Ind., will again defend their title. Other teams entered so far includes: North Carolina, Griffins of Wilson Moores of Wilson, Lowdermilkes of Greensboro, Rollins of Kinston; Illinois, Dahlquists of Milford, Van Duynes of Joliet, Millers of Galesburg; Indiana, Kimes of Spencerville, Biddles of Mishawaka, Habeggers of Berne, Clarks of Huntington; Virginia, team from Fieldale, yet unannounced; Tennessee, Harris from Oak Ridge; Maine, Karkos of Wilton; Pennsylvania, Harmans of Hanover; New York, Capellettis from Syracuse.

Old Town's Face Newly Aged

As the final phase of the city's physical reconstruction nears completion, there are half a dozen restoration or reconstruction projects under way. Rehabilitation of one old building has been completed and another quaint eighteenth century dwelling, the James Craig house, will be finished this month.

First building to be completed in the new program was the Greenhow-Repiton brick office, long believed to have been a colonial debtors' prison. Having stood fairly well the ravages of two centuries, it was restored to its original appearance and was put into use as a private residence in September.

Next to the Raleigh Tavern, finishing touches are being applied to the Craig house, home of one of Williamsburgh's most prosperous — and prominent— jewelers of Colonial times.

On Market Square Green, work is progressing rapidly on the Guardhouse for the Magazine, the colonial arsenal of the city. The Magazine is another surviving eighteenth century structure and when the Guardhouse is completed in the spring, both structures will be authentically refurnished and opened as another exhibition unit of colonial Williamsburg.

There are small signs at each project explaining the design, documentary study and past history of each of the eighteenth century structures so that visitors may follow the work going forward.

The new 46-room annex to Williamsburg Lodge is expected to be ready for use in the early spring and will provide additional guest facilities for the city. The exterior and interior design will harmonize with the other units of the lodge and the entire structure, just south of the other buildings, will be completely air conditioned.

Sights to See

Va. Beach Is Gateway To History

STUDENT of history or casual sightseer, the traveler interested in visiting the historical shrines of eastern Virginia and North Carolina will be hard pressed to find a more suitably located basing point than Virginia Beach.

Every year additional thousands discover the pleasure and cultural value of establishing vacation headquarters at Virginia Beach, where the usual resort features may be alternated between interesting and informative visits.

Such adjacent points as Cape Henry, where Capt. John Smith and his band of colonists landed in 1607 before moving on to the permanent settlement of Jamestown Island, are unsurpassed in historical interest.

Another of more than a dozen historical spots nearby is Witch Duck, where Grace Sherwood, the only woman to face trial in the South for witchcraft, endured the ordeal by water.

Broad highways extend from Virginia Beach to the Colonial National Historical Park, permitting the tourist to follow the main stream of Colonial development from its beginning (at Cape Henry) to Jamestown, where the story of Pocahontas and the beginnings of the colony evoke considerable interest, to Williamsburg, the restoration of which to its original pattern is nearing completion. (See story on Page One.)

Armour, Perry At Boca Raton

Boca Raton, Fla., Dec. 11.—Two of the greatest names in sport are associated with Boca Raton Club, Fla., this season.

Tommy Armour, the "Wee Silver Scot," winner of virtually every championship in golf, will resume his post as pro there, in charge of links activity for his twentieth year. Fred Perry, three-time winner of the amateur and pro titles, will be in charge of tennis. William Jay O'Brien, former Olympics contender and outstanding juvenile instructor, will direct swimming activity.

The North Course, known to golfers throughout the world, is ready for play now. Likewise, the six tennis courts, the Garden pool and Cabana pool also are ready.

Pennsylvania Building Its Dream Road

320 Miles, and No Stoplight!

Airview of the Blue Mountain interchange, a completed section of the Pennsylvania Turnpike, where motorists can drive without climbing a hill, dodging traffic, or stopping for a red light

By L. U. Leslie

HARRISBURG, Dec. 11 (AP).—Think of driving 320 miles clear across Pennsylvania without climbing a hill, dodging across traffic or stopping at a red light!

That's the famed Pennsylvania Turnpike two years from now.

The Pennsylvania Turnpike Commission, which operates the motorists' dream highway, hopes that other States to the West will build their own connecting links and establish a transcontinental express highway.

The original turnpike, connecting Pittsburgh and Harrisburg, was completed in 1940 at a cost of 70 million dollars as an experiment. The super highway bypasses cities, motorists paying a toll for using it.

Extensions Projected

THE first turnpike—a 160-mile stretch of four-lane, easy grade, divided highway with seven tunnels through the Allegheny Mountains—has been so successful that extensions east to Philadelphia and west to the Ohio State line have been projected.

Work actually has started on the 100-mile eastern extension, to cost 75 million dollars. A second 60-mile extension to the Ohio line, near Youngstown, Ohio, is in the survey stage. Gov. James H. Duff hopes both extensions will be completed by the end of 1950.

The turnpike is operated by the commission on a self-liquidating basis with a toll of approximately a cent a mile for passenger automobiles. When bonds sold to finance constructions are paid off the turnpike will become a part of the Commonwealth's free road system.

Impressive figures attest the popularity of the turnpike, which Governor Duff termed "a four-lane railroad on rubber."

In the last year 3,143,450 motor vehicles paid $5,181,029 through the turnpike toll gates. From the opening of the express highway October 1, 1940, until May 31, 1948, a total of 11,337,969 automobiles and 2,801,151 trucks traveled the easy-grade road. They paid a grand total of $22,056,266 in tolls in traveling 1,313,536,766 miles between the eastern and western toll gates.

Highly Praised

THE turnpike has been highly praised by military men and was used extensively during World War II to transport supplies to the Eastern seaboard.

With completion of the extensions Governor Duff said it "will not only be a highway that will stimulate production, induce business to stay here and bring new business here, but also may be the greatest military highway in the world."

As plans proceed to develop the turnpike, Governor Duff repeatedly has emphasized the Commonwealth's free road system will be constantly improved in reconstructing main highways and further extending secondary farm-to-market roads. At the end of World War II, the Commonwealth embarked on a five-year highway improvement program of 100 million dollars annually.

It's always sun bathing, boating, fishing and swimming time in subtropical Fort Lauderdale. The Gulf Stream is only a mile and a half off-shore, so this beauty with basketball gives never a thought to chilblains

Yucatan's Ruins Speak

They Thought It Could Never Die

By Delos Smith

CHICHEN ITZA, Yucatan, Mexico (U.P.).—In this Atomic Age many earnest people talk with fear of the end of civilization.

This was civilization, too—700 years ago. It was the New York of its time. Its inhabitants knew everything there was to know. They were wealthy—they were self-satisfied. They excelled in astronomy, in mathematics, in architecture, in the arts.

And so in stone they built their monuments for eternity, cocksure civilization was going to go on forever.

You get a clammy feeling and not from the weather because it is Miami-like here in December.

A turkey gobbler pompously escorts a convoy of hens through the ruins of civilization. A bare-foot Indian boy hawks Coca Cola in this place where as many as 500,000 civilized persons assembled on feast days like New Year's Eve in Times Square or Mardi Gras in New Orleans.

Enough for a Skyscraper

YOU CLIMB steeply slanted stone steps—up and up and up until you are on top of a Mayan pyramid as high as a low-ceilinged 10-story New York apartment building. Underfoot is a solid mass of masonry—enough building material for a skyscraper, and erected here almost a 1000 years ago by the Mayan people who had no metallic tools.

From the temple of Kukulcan you look down on what was civilization. Way over there is the huge heap and exquisitely carved columns of the Pentagon of the day—the headquarters of the military establishment. Next to it the temple of 1000 columns—no roof, just columns reaching up.

In every direction great piles of stone upon which hundreds of thousands of human beings had to labor for years to heap and mortar symmetrically as temples and palaces for their kings and priests.

Over there the quadrangle of the balcourt. Here civilization relaxed. Athletes played a form of basketball in a paved court 493 feet long and the multitudes stood on the high roofs of the temples, cheering them on. If you don't believe they were scientists in that civilization stand at one end of the court and have a friend speak in an ordinary tone of voice at the other. You hear his every word, sharply and clearly. It is an accoustical miracle—a telephone without wires.

Dug Out Since 1925

THESE monuments have been dug out of the jungle which grew over them only since 1925, largely with funds from the Carnegie Foundation. And extensive as they are, they're only a small part of the remains of the Mayans, who were civilized when Europe was buried in the Dark Ages. They had more than 50 cities in this general vicinity of which Chichen Itza was the holy place.

Not far away is the Mayaland lodge of Fernando Barbachano, a gentleman of tremendous natural charm who would be a successful salesman (in the best sense), no matter where he lived. The main building is a hacienda of Spanish-Moorish architecture with a long verandah where pretty little Mayan girls in native dress serve cooling drinks. The dining room is as modern as the cuisine is excellent and scattered through a tropical garden are cabins for guests with twin beds, electric lights, tiled bathrooms, and hot water. Civilization couldn't offer more comfort.

Eighty miles away, reached by a smooth, paved highway is Merida, capital of Yucatan. Chichen Itz is what the Yucatecas mean when they say they have antiquity with which to enthrall the world—and the remains of one civilization with which to speak, in mute eloquence, to this one.

Resorts Reclaim Minnick

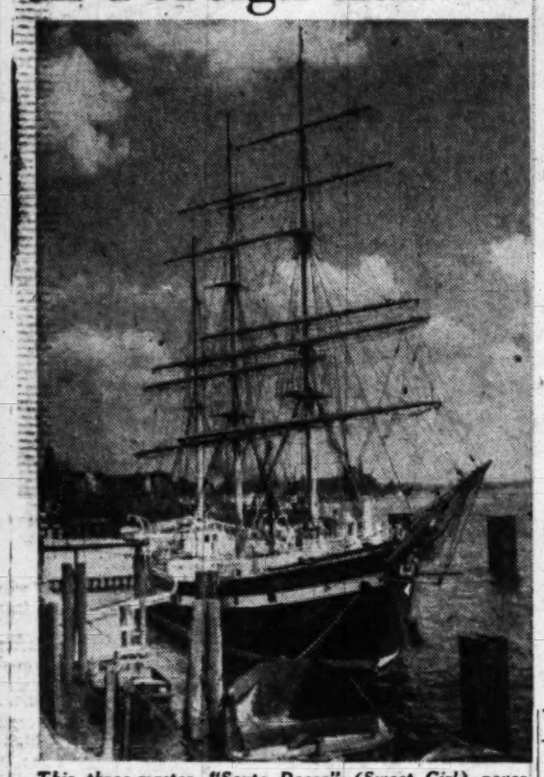
MIAMI BEACH, Dec. 11.—Fordyce C. Minnick of Arlington, Va., has returned to the resort field as the new manager of the Gulf Stream Hotel Apartments and Cottages which opened here for the season on December 1. Mr. Minnick formerly was with the Everglades Club in Palm Beach and the Pollin Springs Hotel in Maine.

MR. MINNICK

More recently, in Washington, D. C., Mr. Minnick managed Hotel 2400 and was associated with Hotel Washington and the Mayflower. During the war, and until it was sold last spring, he operated the Meridian Hill Hotel.

Mrs. Minnick, whom Washingtonians know as Evalyn Tyner, will join her husband as soon as she fulfills her current engagement in New York. Their son, Wendy, now in school at Stamford, Conn., will be here for the holidays.

Latchkeys Are Out In Foreign Lands



This three-master, "Seute Deern" (Sweet Girl) never leaves her berth in Hamburg's Elbe River. Now a hotel and restaurant, she has a comfortable dining room and cabins for 40 people

ONE wouldn't think so to read the papers, but some people in Europe are thinking of something besides the Berlin airlift. And that something is more American dollars. According to the American Express, preparations for "entertaining" the American visitor for the coming season exceed all previous efforts. Norway and Austria are featuring ski events and the St. Moritz-Zermatt "Glacier Express" will return to service in Switzerland.

France's famed blue coast, the Riviera from Nice to Menton, is bustling diligently in anticipation of the best winter season since 1938. The French National Tourist Office in New York says the Riviera period of gaiety will get under way immediately after Christmas and not stop until about Easter time. Among events will be the Carnival of Nice on February 17, the Citrus Festival in Menton, a big European Night in Cannes and a festival of Picasso art and regional folklore in Antibes. Room and meals for one in a de luxe hotel will average an estimated $15 a day, but there are hundreds of smaller hotels and comfortable pensions where the tourist on a budget can live happily for $5 to $10 a day. Special air excursion rates from New York are in effect until April 1.

Service Is Better

JOHN STANTON of Thomas Cook & Son, just back from an inspection tour in Europe, says there is a tremendous improvement in European hotels, both as to equipment and service, since his visit a year ago. Stanton visited Italy, France, Holland, Belgium, Scandinavia and Great Britain.

He said this general refurbishing of European accommodations was especially evident in Italy, where many hotels in the large cities have virtually returned to prewar standards. Stanton said that while food rationing continues in most of Europe, the average traveler finds his fare entirely satisfactory. In Britain, he said, where one continues to hear much about food rationing, the traveler fares extremely well, and a rigid control of prices makes routing especially attractive.

Floating Hotels

SOME enterprising restaurateurs in Hamburg, Germany, have converted a small fleet of vessels into floating hotels and restaurants. They range from a tiny ferry boat to a derelict ocean-going liner. They are dotted about the city on the River Elbe, the lakes and the canals. One is a three-masted sailing vessel which has a dining room and cabins for 40 people. Another is the 16,000-ton liner St. Louis, bombed and burned at Kiel in 1944. Towed to Hamburg, she was cleaned up inside and now offers travelers 250 beds in single, double or three-berth cabins.

Big Game Hunting

EAST AFRICA is making a concerted bid for the dollars of the American sportsmen and tourists. Big game hunting with gun and camera is a big business there and they hope to increase the flow of hard money by arranging quick, streamlined safaris for hurried Americans who can afford the price. It is now possible for the busy American executive to fly to Kenya, bag a nice collection of big game trophies, including maybe a lion or an elephant, and be back in his office within a month's time. Typical rate for a one-month trip into the shooting country is about $3000. For a party of two the cost figures at about $2150 apiece.

Cruise Rates

CRUISE rates to the Caribbean and West Indies are about $30 a day—but that doesn't seem to be scaring anybody off. All companies report bookings at a high level. Agents say the rates actually aren't as high as they look, that people have compared this year's rates with those for, say, 1939, and the difference gave them a short shock. Actually, agents say, they're not out of line in comparison with like commodities.

Two reasons given for the volume of cruise business: There is a new crop of adult customers, people who never before, due to the war principally, had the chance to go a-sailing. And there is the group of "frustrated regulars" which has waited so long to get back on a cruise ship.

Two Holland-American ships are back in the cruise business. Cunard White Star is offering a fleet of ships, including, later in the season, the new Caronia, designed especially for cruising. She will make her maiden voyage this winter (sailing January 4 from Southampton) and cruise to the Caribbean in February, March and April. Another veteran returning this winter, completely rebuilt, is the Queen of Bermuda.

Holland-American is sending the Veendam on a Christmas and New Year's cruise to the Caribbean starting on December 23. The line's Nieuw Amsterdam sails December 21 on a 13-day trip to San Juan, La Guaira, Curacao, Kingston and Havana. The French liner De Grasse will make some of the same ports on two 13-day cruises to be undertaken in February.

Modernizing in Bermuda

WORD comes from Bermuda that when the Princess Hotel reopens February 1 more than $850,000 will have been spent in modernization and refurnishing it. Reopening of the Princess will add hotel accommodations for between 650 and 700 visitors.

Quints Now Hardly Stir A Ripple

By Margaret Trainer

CALLANDER, Ontario, Dec. 11 (U.P.).—This birthplace of the Dionne quintuplets, once as crowded with visitors as Coney Island on Sunday, is a ghost town today. The famous girls walk through the streets without causing a ripple of excitment.

Even papa Olivia Dionne's souvenir stand, where he proudly sold mementos of the birth of his daughters, is becoming dilapidated. The paint is peeling from a huge mural of the five laughing babies.

Cars coming into Callander this summer mostly keep right on going north to the fine game and fishing country nearby. Police Chief Walter Hodgson, remarking on the small tourist business this year, recalled the summer of 1940 when he clocked cars coming into Callander at the rate of 12 every minute.

The girls, Annette, Cecile, Marie, Emilie and Yvonne, now are 14 years old. Always accompanied by their parents or one of their older sisters, the quints frequently come two miles from their farm home to Callander or even go to North Bay 11 miles away. Their appearance causes little notice.

The decline in tourists appears to stem from the time six years ago when Dionne decided that visitors could no longer watch his daughters play in the wire-enclosed yard near their home. The welcome mat will not be rolled out again, at least until the girls have finished their schooling, he said.

That's No 'Shmoo' It's a Beaver

VISITORS to Laura S. Walker State Park at Waycross are warned not to shoot the furry little animals running around the park's 200-acre Lake Walker for "shmoos." The State Game and Fish Commission recently trapped 150 beaver and stocked some of them at Laura Walker to see how they would fare in this Deep South Georgia country. Southern beaver have become almost extinct and this is part of the Pittman-Robertson project to restock them in Georgia.

Life Still Easy in Tahiti

LIFE in the South Seas is still relaxing, and just watching the ocean and the sky still confers sure contentment on tired refugees from modern civilization, it is affirmed in a recent report to Thomas Cook & Son from the almost-legendary paradise of Tahiti in the South Pacific.

The popular belief that South Sea Island beauties grow old before 20 is only a rumor, according to the report, for Tahitian girls now benefit from civilization's attractions and look like teen-agers in their thirties.

A week's budget, including home, meals, maid service, and laundry, should be figured at $50, although this can sink as low as $22 when the exchange rate fluctuates. There are many Americans living there in varying degrees of comfort, and offer each other plenty of company. Bungalows with beachcombing locations near lagoons rent from $30 a month up. Food is plentiful. Fish can be caught in the lagoons with no trouble. Swimming is the sport all day long.

The hardships associated with present-day life in the South Seas are frequent failure of electricity, expensive cigarettes and gasoline and riding in buses to town means jostling with chickens, laundry, bicycles, raw copra, and pigs. Also ships with the mail come along very seldom.

Song Tableaux to Greet Guests at Hot Springs

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Dec. 11.—A huge mass choir will convey this resort's Yuletide message of goodwill to holiday visitors in song and tableaux at 9 p. m. Christmas Eve at the northern end of Bath House Row, in front of the Arlington Hotel.

Four beautiful tableaux will be presented. The carolers, all attired in white vestments and carrying lighted tapers, will march down winding mountain paths to a platform in the park below. The tableaux will be staged on the bluff behind the singers and overlooking the heart of the city.

Suwannee Folk Plan Better Life

Anglers fish with cracker (cane) poles along the famous, placid Suwannee River in Florida. From Blount's ferry on the Georgia line down to Demory Hill, citizens are bestirring to make more livable the area of farmlands innundated by floods in the past

By Andy Anderson

SUWANNEE, Fla., Dec. 11 (AP).—Some days have been so dark and dreary along the normally placid old stream Stephen Foster made famous that the old folks at home are going to make things a little brighter for themselves.

All up and down the Suwannee River Valley—from Blount's ferry on the Georgia line down to Demory Hill where the water empties into Suwannee Sound between Cat and Hog Islands—citizens are bestirring themselves to make more livable the area of farmlands, lazy dark waters, dripping Spanish moss, pines and palms. Song-famous through the years, it has been most unromantic at times.

One of these occasions was early 1948 when record-breaking floods cut all traffic between east and west Florida. That made it imperative that the counties involved do something about flood control to save themselves losses of further millions of dollars. This is going to be done with Government help.

In addition, dwellers in this saddle between peninsula and panhandle Florida are becoming more conscious of the natural beauties of their homeland. Highway beautification and more park development are on the schedule.

Wildlife

THEY want, too, to do something to conserve the wildlife, but not to interfere with angling for the famed black bass and the hunting for small game which abounds in the region.

A committee is working with the Cedar Keys Experiment Station (just south of Suwannee Sound, but north of Snake Key and Seahorse Key in the Gulf of Mexico) to rebuild, if possible, the once great oyster industry.

The citizens have set up cultural standards, too. But above all they want their valley to be a place they won't want to leave and for which visitors' hearts will be yearning ever.

To accomplish all this, the Suwannee River Valley Development Association was formed to represent the counties along the river—which flows out of mostly-unexplored Okeefenokee Swamp in Georgia—and its tributaries.

They elected Fred J. Green of Like Oak president, and chose a board of directors of two representatives each from the counties of Bradford, Columbia, Dixie, Gilchrist, Hamilton, Levy, Lafeyette, Madison, Suwannee and Union.

Committees have been meeting almost daily since. Each county has been asked to contribute two cents per capita based on the 1945 census (total population: 88,079) and money is coming in.

Rich in History

THE valley is rich in history but, like the sometimes turbulent river, things have not always been done in a precise manner. For instance, the town of Suwannee is spelled with two n's and two e's. The town of Suwanee Valley has only one n. For another town they just dropped the front part and called it Wannee. Many people writing about the river spell it with only one n; but almost no one drops the u.

The region is reasonably prosperous. There is much timber from which comes lumber and naval stores. There are tobacco and other farm crops. There are myriad fast-flowing crystal springs which add their waters to the dark brown-black current which winds its way to the Gulf.

Vestiges of old forts used in the Indian wars are still to be found along the Suwannee's upper waters. Indian relics abound on the sites of ancient battle grounds.

Civil War Memoirs

ANTE-BELLUM mansions—rarities now in the South—still stand here and there to bring back memories of life before the Civil War. Search for pirate treasure near the Suwannee's mouth, where tradition says buccaneers had rendezvous once, still goes on now and then.

The Suwannee was once a transportation artery from north Florida. Steamboats plied southward to Branford—midway down the State—and back carrying the long staple cotton then grown in this area. But this traffic died when railroads penetrated the valley.

Film Star Shacks Dot the Desert

PALM SPRINGS, Calif., Dec. 11 (U.P.).—New resort hotels with ankle-deep rugs and glass walls are popping up on the desert like cactus, but they won't have many movie stars signing the registers. The film folk are busy building desert homes of their own. The idea is to save on fancy hotel rents.

The latest shack causing original desert rats to rattle in their graves is Frank Sinatra's. This $110,000 showpiece has a swimming pool in the shape of a grand piano and a master shower bath with sunken faucets. The inside has stair-step levels with a piano on the top layer so Sinatra can croon to the lowered guests.

Frankie has built his place out in the sticks to get privacy. The land around tripled in value, and he has lots of neighbors now. The wall around the house doesn't squelch autograph hounds, either. The city has a law about 4-foot walls so tourists can peek at the houses.

Darryl F. Zanuck built a house to have a private croquet lawn. This is lighted for night croquetting, and is dubbed "the ball park." Like everybody else, Zanuck grows a new lawn every year (it takes only 10 days). That's cheaper than having it watered while he's away all summer.

Raymond Loewy's kidney-shaped swimming pool is half outside and half inside, taking up part of the living room and front hall. At Mr. L.'s housewarming, William Powell and Tony Martin both tumbled in. Mr. Loewy, the obliging host, jumped in, too.

Al Jolson lives winters in a block-big affair. Bob Hope built himself a plain two-bedroom place. So many of his writers and gentlemen of the press moved in on him, however, that he put up a larger place on the other side of town. Now the guests loll around in shorts at house one and Hope gets his suntan at house two.

Floyd Odlum, the former RKO mogul, has a 1000-acre ranch with an individual sand dune for each guest cottage.

Traffic Trouble

A strange story comes from across the border in New Brunswick, Canada. The hunter involved, a New Yorker, was sitting on a deer runway in the woods near Spednic Lake. It was late afternoon and darkness was closing in on the dense forest.

The hunter rose to his feet and for several minutes stood silent and motionless while checking his bearings before striking back to camp. Determining the direction he was to travel, he stooped down to pick up his rifle. As he straightened up he heard a swishing of great wings and was knocked sprawling on his back by a large feathered body that crashed into his face.

Beyond getting a slightly blackened eye and having his uppers knocked out of his mouth he was none the worse for his experience.

After finally pulling himself together, he decided that a very large owl had swooped down from a tree and collided with him when he suddenly popped up in the path of the flight after reaching down for his rifle.—A. P.

There'll Be Light

Yule Festival All Set at Atlantic City

THE Christmas Festival of Light in Atlantic City will be more illuminating than ever this year with the entire island scheduled to wear the red and green lights of the season.

Hotels, business houses, municipal buildings and private homes will compete for awards. Trees in the various park areas and on the Boardwalk will display decorated trees for the strollers.

The festival is only one of the many things planned for the entertainment of the guests during the winter months. Public skating on the huge ice rink of the Convention Hall may be enjoyed throughout the month of December and each Sunday morning there is a special session for the figure skaters.

Too, the famous Boardwalk, fanned by the warm salt breezes from the Gulf Stream and bathed in the direct and reflected sunshine, is the ideal place for strolling throughout the winter months. The resort boasts an average daytime temperature of 41.3 degrees during the months of December, January and February, considerably warmer than the various nearby metropolitan areas.

A free vacation will reward the person submitting the most practical idea for an "added attraction" or entertainment feature at Wildwood-by-the-Sea. Wildwood's department of public relations, in cooperation with the Greater Wildwood Chamber of Commerce, Wildwood Hotel and Party Boat Associations, Night Club, Restaurant and Boardwalk amusement operators, is offering this complete vacation which includes transportation to and from Wildwood, via train, motor or plane; dinner at the Tuna Club as guests of the city; accommodations at one of Wildwood's finest hotels for the week of August 21 to 28; all meals; a supper club tour, including most of Wildwood's famous night spots; a deep sea fishing trip; a moonlight ocean cruise; dancing in the ballroom; bicycling on the boardwalk; tickets for boardwalk amusements; horseback riding on the beach; tennis, shuffleboard and bowling; a souvenir album of pictures taken of the trip; bathing from world's finest and safest beach; a brand new car to transport guest during entire stay, and a 16 mm. motion picture taken of entire vacation will be given to the winner.

New Mexico

Take Off Your Boots—Relax!

This is one of New Mexico's numerous dude ranches, the Flying B. Ranch near Las Vegas, run by Bert and Dorothy Oxtell. Northern New Mexico resort owners are looking forward to a busy winter tourist season

By Sanky Trimble

SANTE FE, N. Mex., Dec. 11 (AP).—Northern New Mexico resort operators are sowing the seeds for what they hope will be a bumper harvest of the Southwest's greatest money crop—tourist visitors. Operators of dude ranches and guest lodges have joined the Nation-wide movement to create interest in all-season vacations.

Almost Anything

NEW MEXICO, they are claiming with enthusiasm, is the ideal spot to come for almost anything.

New Mexico, they say, not only has the climate for a vacation any time of the year, but what's more, can produce good entertainment during any season.

Here, say the operators, a vacationing Washingtonian and his family can count on much the same—if not more—attractions he would expect to find in the summer.

Ceremonials at many of New Mexico's Indian pueblos and reservation headquarters are scheduled during the winter months. Hunting and fishing is popular the year around.

Of recent years, the area has been gaining popularity as a winter sports center, with ski runs available at Albuquerque, Santa Fe and Tres Ritos—the latter serving the Taos-Las Vegas areas.

Top O' the Year

SCENIC attractions also are being boosted. The association is advising prospective visitors that fall and winter are considered by many the finest part of the year. Annually hundreds pour into the mountains to view the aspens as they turn to shimmering gold and more enjoy seeing the snow in the mountain areas.

Hotel at Nassau Opens Dec. 15

Down in Nassau, the Fort Montagu Beach Hotel, on the ocean front, will open for the season December 15. In addition to the airlines that regularly service the Bahamas, the Mauretania will make special cruises to Nassau all winter.

The Fort Montagu has its own beach on the Atlantic as well as facilities for sailing, fishing, golf and tennis.

This season the hotel has redecorated and air conditioned its Hibiscus Bar and has equipped all rooms with circulating ice water.

Rates are from $24 to $30 per day double and from $14 to $20 single, from December 15 to January 9 and from March 28 to April 30. From January 9 to March 28 they are $38 to $45 per day double and $24 to $35 single, American plan.

No Plane Changes

Many airlines are eliminating the inconvenience of changing from one plane to another on long international flights. No change of plane is required, for instance, on a 5700 mile flight, made by Peruvian International Airways in 32 hours, from New York via Washington, Havana, Panama and Lima, Peru to Santiago, Chile.

Dropping of Visas Welcomed

THE abandonment of visa requirements by one country after another is very welcome to American travelers, says Arthur L. Walmisley, Thomas Cook & Son's manager for Eastern Hemisphere travel.

In Europe the following countries now require no visas on American passports: Great Britain, Belgium, Denmark, Holland, Italy, Luxembourg, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland. Thus almost all the favorite fields for American tourist travel in Europe can be visited without the formality of securing visas beforehand.

In the Western Hemisphere, Americans need no visas for traveling in Canada, Bermuda, the Bahamas, the British West Indies, Panama, Mexico and all American possessions. And, of course, there are special no-visa arrangements for travelers on cruises to West Indies and to many South American ports of call.

Prices Drop in Mexico

Mexico City, Dec. 11.—Prices here are almost 30 per cent below those charged last year. Leading hotels provide accommodations for about $2.25 single, a full-course dinner costs $1.50 and fuel is available to visitors for an average of 19 cents a gallon.

Wildlife Abounds In Aransas Refuge

By John O'Reilly

AUSTWELL, TEX., Dec. 11.—The Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, a tract of 47,261 acres of flat land on the Texas coast, presents a vivid demonstration of how an abundance of wildlife may be maintained in an area through protection and the improvement of habitats suitable to the various types of native animals.

Just now the dust of the most severe duststorms since 1939 is clearing from the air over a large part of Texas. Streams are low. Ranchers complain of the drought. Deer hunters complain of fewer deer. Goose hunters, who made their customary trips to the south Texas prairies, found that the thousands of wild geese usually found there at this time of year had moved on southward, probably into Mexico.

In contrast the Aransas Refuge supports not only a heavy population of wildlife but cattle as well. It is one of a series of Federal refuges established through the country primarily for waterfowl but which also provide sanctuary for other animals.

It was established as a refuge 10 years ago. Since then there has been no hunting in the area. Additional shallow, fresh water ponds have been built and planted with food suitable for ducks and geese.

Ranchers Lease Grazing Rights

GRAZING rights for 3000 or more head of cattle and their calves are leased to ranchers. There are those who feel that no grazing should be permitted on Federal refuges but that it is a matter of Government policy. There is no question but that the area could support more wildlife if the cattle were not there but the point evident now is that even with controlled grazing a much better ecology can be maintained in this area than is maintained in nearly similar areas.

For the last 10 years an average of slightly more than 1000 deer per year have been trapped on the refuge and released in other areas where deer are scarce. But the deer constitute only a fraction of the wildlife that the area supports.

In traveling about the refuge this correspondent witnessed scenes at every turn which brought to mind the tales of old timers about the abundance that existed before the country was subjected to progress.

As the jeep in which we traveled moved along dirt roads or wound between the clumps of oak and brush thickets, deer sprang up, ran a short distance and then turned to watch the vehicle. Flocks of wild turkeys moved slowly off into thickets. Ducks of many species floated on the surface of every pond. Thousands more swam in the salt water bays along the coast.

Out on the open marshes there were thousands of Canada geese. Although the big population of snow geese had moved on southward there were some that lingered on the refuge. Sandhill cranes stood in open glades in groups ranging up to more than 20. Through the thickets roamed bands of peccaries, or javelinas, the wild swine whose range extends into southern Texas.

Bird Life Rich and Varied

PROVIDING a haven for game species has also brought an increase of nongame species. The bird life of the region is rich and varied. Charles A. Keefer, manager of the refuge, said that more than 350 species of birds have been reported there. This correspondent saw birds ranging from the vermillion flycatcher to American bald eagles, a pair of which already had started to nest in a large live oak tree.

A study of the refuge area was an object lesson in what can be done under proper management. With the steady increase of human population and industry it would not be possible to have all areas as populous with wildlife as the refuge, but it proves that under improved management rural areas, public and private, could be made to support a richer variety of wildlife than they do at present. The refuge as a whole provides a hope for the American countryside, but that hope is blurred by the dust clouds in the skies over Texas.

Mountain Scaling No Child's Play, But

It's Tougher to Climb Down

By Elliott Chaze

BOULDER, COLO., Dec. 11 (AP).—Chuck Hutchinson first met the girl he was to marry on a Colorado mountain top.

The first thing he ever said to her was: "Honey, when you climb a steep slope you walk like a duck."

At 25 Chuck is one of the finest climbers in the Rocky Mountain rescue patrol. He has been scrambling around in the rocks of Boulder County since he was old enough to walk.

His father, Charles, sr., organized the rescue patrol. It has saved the lives of climbers who discovered that unclimbing a mountain can be tougher than climbing one. Chuck's two brothers, Thomas, 22, and James, 20, also are skilled mountaineers.

The family group is the core of the patrol, a volunteer unit that specializes in plucking human beings off sheer rock faces. Most of their work is on the flatirons, a jagged sandstone formation just off the Colorado University campus.

The thing that impresses Chuck most is the way folks act when they "get stuck on a rock."

"They don't really see you," Chuck says. "You're just a green shirt or a red shirt coming to save them. While you're bringing 'em down they're the politest people in the world—if they aren't too scared to talk. It's thank-you this, and much-obliged that. Then you meet them on the street the next day and they don't know you."

Others stranded a thousand feet or so above the ground are paralyzed with fear and can neither speak nor move when the rescuers arrive. They must be pried loose, then lowered by rope to the ground. When they get down they stretch out on the ground, roll on it, press their faces into it and laugh. "Then like as not they get up and run like hell," Chuck says.

Rescue patrol negotiates a vertical climb to effect a rescue in the Rocky Mountains near Boulder, Colo. Charles Hutchinson, jr., inches upward on the sheer rock face while Leroy Holubar, directly below him, and Bruce Snow, at bottom, anchor rope against possibility of a slip

All at Colorado U.

TOM HUTCHINSON says that other stranded persons are "dangerously cooperative."

"The rescuers can't plan anything out loud," Tom says. "Because this sort of person wants to do everything in a hurry, anything to help. Sometimes they want to grab hold of ropes and slide down before we have the ropes anchored. The rescuers have to whisper their plans around this kind of bird."

All four of the Hutchinson men are connected with Colorado University. The father, a big pipe-smoking gent with a brush of gray hair, is head of the department of applied mathematics in the school of engineering. Charles, jr. (Chuck) is a research assistant at the school's engineering experiment station. Jim and Tom are students.

The senior Hutchinson, known to the patrol and to his sons simply as "Hutch," decided about two years ago that Boulder County needed an organized rescue unit. His decision was prompted by a disaster near Navajo peak. Three climbers—two men and a girl—had tied themselves together and the girl slipped, dragging the others with her. The girl and one of the men were killed. Hutch wrote a guest editorial for the town paper.

The result: About 100 university students, faculty members and business men volunteered to join a rescue unit. They agreed to work without pay. Very few of them were topflight climbers. But most of them could ski and had at least some mountain experience.

Since then they've brought bodies of plane crash victims in from wild snow-drifted areas in the mountain country, they've pulled tourists and students and plain Colorado citizens off a dozen peaks and they've built up an esprit de corps which makes it a pretty special thing to belong to the patrol.

One rookie member is John Hawkins of Denver, 18-year-old pre-medical student who was rescued from the flatirons by the Hutchinson brothers only a few weeks ago, after watching his best friend Robert Pankey fall 500 feet to his death. Hawkins and his friend had gone up the sloping backside of the flatirons and decided to come down the naked face.

Nature's Trap

THE FLATIRONS have claimed seven lives in recent years. They rise more than 1000 feet. From a side view this line of slanting rock teeth—there are five of them—looks deceptively easy to climb.

As Chuck puts it: "Nature's laid a beautiful trap. And it works. We pull an average of three parties a year off these rocks. And there are 'blotter jobs', too, retrieving the broken bodies of the dead. It's an ugly business."

Bruce Snow, a graduate student of biology, and secretary of the rescue patrol, says there's no hope of killing the mountain climbing urge in people. "But they can be educated," he says. "We've started holding climbing classes."

"Green climbers get in trouble for a very simple reason," Snow said. "They're scared all the time, so when they reach a really bad spot they can't hear the mountain talking to them. A good climber is usually relaxed. He can almost hear the danger up there. It's a thing that can't be learned from books."

Melchior's Off to Africa in January to Hunt Wild Game

By Frank Eck

NEW YORK, Dec. 11 (AP).—Lauritz Melchior would rather hunt than sing at the Met. Opera's No. 1 Wagnerian tenor will do just that for seven weeks this winter. On January 9 he flies to Paris, then to Tripoli, Tunis and Nairobi for an expedition through Kenya with three friends.

The trip is costing each hunter about $4000, says Melchior, who is passing up about five Met. appearances. The Dane loves to hunt wild game, but is no wanton killer.

"I would rather keep my bullet in my gun than shoot just for the excitement of killing," says Melchoir.

Melchior, who has been hunting since his boyhood days in Copenhagen where he began as a retriever for a Danish forester, has been on many expeditions. In the last 16 years he has hunted in Alaska, British Columbia, Alberta, New Brunswick, South America and Europe but this is his first trek to Africa.

In Europe he has his own estate, a 3000-acre layout with a castle, three lakes, cattle, farm and private shooting preserve. "But that's 65 miles southeast of Berlin in the Province of Niederlausitz, about 40 miles from the American zone. The Russians use it as a recreation home for aged foresters. I get $6 a month rent from the Russian government. At one time the Nazi government wanted to buy it for Himmler. They offered me a quarter of a million dollars, but I turned them down. It's a beautiful place, on a peninsula. One time during diggings we unearthed an old graveyard and Viking spears."

Then the 270-pound Dane turned his thoughts to the great outdoors:

"For me the outdoor life—hunting—is my church. I feel nearer to God when I'm with the animals. When you see the animals you get the feeling there is something over you."

Ship Queen of Bermuda Returns to Sea Feb. 12

THE QUEEN OF BERMUDA will return to the New York-Bermuda service on February 12, according to John Walsh of Furness, Withy & Co., Ltd.

"After almost a year and a half of reconversion the "Queen" will return with all of the luxurious facilities that made her so popular with prewar vacationists, supplemented by new devices which will add to the pleasure and comfort of passengers," Walsh said. "Completely renovated from bow to stern, the "Queen" on her return will be one of the most modern ships sailing from New York on regular service," Walsh added.

Walsh said he believed that the Queen of Bermuda would be welcomed heartily when she returns to New York. "We have received hundreds of inquiries regarding sailing dates from travel agents and the general public," Walsh added.

Several prominent Bermuda government officials will come to New York to make the maiden voyage of the "new" steamer. The island is looking forward to the arrival and special events have been scheduled to honor the "Queen" and its passengers. The Princess and Bermudiana Hotels have planned receptions and balls on the night of arrival and the following night.

The "Queen" is a vessel with turbo-electric propulsion, with a gross tonnage of 22,500, a speed of 21 knots and accommodations for 731 passengers.

Public rooms throughout the ship have been completely redecorated, each in its individual motif.

The "Queen" has the same number of suites and de luxe accommodations as before, but all have been refurnished and modernized and the decorator's touch is apparent here as in other staterooms in the many different color combinations. Sixteen single cabins on the sun deck have been added. This space was formerly taken up by a number of small verandas, and the new cabins are expected to prove popular with sun-tan devotees.

Many of the staterooms have been reconstructed to allow for more commodious space and greater comfort. One of the stateroom innovations is the elimination of all fixed-type upper berths. These have been replaced by a new and ingenious type of disappearing Pullman bed which provides considerably more space. Every stateroom on the ship has its own private bath.

The dining room, foyer and cocktail bar have been modernized and are equipped with the latest type of air conditioning. Fluorescent lighting has been installed in the dining rooms and public spaces.

Prior to the war the Queen of Bermuda traveled more than 500,000 miles in the New York-Bermuda service, and carried over 375,000 passengers.

Jekyll Park Makes Debut

ATLANTA, GA. Dec. 11.—Jekyll Island State Park near Brunswick, now open for its first winter season, should be a boon to Georgia's winter tourist business if inquiries about the State's new seashore park are any criterion.

Along with Okefenokee Swamp Park at Waycross, the Little White House at Warm Springs, Stone Mountain in Dekalb County and the Cyclorama in Atlanta, Jekyll is considered a "must" for tourists to see during their travels through Georgia this winter.

Jekyll possesses a mild year-round climate, varying from 40 to 80 degrees, and is at its most beautiful in the winter months with the many tropical gardens containing exotic palms, flowers and shrubs in full bloom. The several thousand acres of primeval forests contain many evergreens such as pine, palmettos, oak and holly and the island is interlaced with 35 miles of roads and trails that make hiking an ideal recreation

Winter sports now available at Jekyll include splendid trout fishing, marsh hen hunting, wild boar hunting, golf and tennis.

A bathhouse casino recently has been constructed on the beach and is now ready for use. There is little swimming at Jekyll during the winter

Jimmy McKoy, who operates the famous old St. John's Tavern at Wilmington, N. C., always wondered why the guests upstairs couldn't hear the singing and merry-making at the bar downstairs. On the Aisle in Gotham

Thespis Now Takes Jobs at Odd Hours

By Richard L. Coe

THE TOWN BETWEEN THE RIVERS: This is the time of year a New York visitor finds vaguely familiar faces behind the necktie counters at Saks Fifth Avenue and the postoffice cages . . . Santa Claus, a lack of enthusiasm for whom the embittered lay to the election, means that jobs at odd hours are easier to get for 85 per cent of Actors' Equity now unemployed . . . This was to have been a season of big musicals, but the failure of "Magdalene," with its $350,000 loss, has frightened backers away from last summer's glowing plans . . . Elmer Rice once more proposes a scheme to guarantee annual wages to a pool of the 700-odd actors whose names pop up regularly in the theater programs, but since this would mean whole-hearted cooperation between ALL producers in a notoriously erratic business, the idea's not got a chance.

THE HIT SHOWS are prospering, but it's far easier to pick up seats at the agencies than it's been for some years . . . The balconyites still have tough sledding . . . At the boxoffice for "A Streetcar Named Desire," just into its second year, the conspicuously courteous lady treasurer explains to a patron there are no $2.40 seats until April . . . Same thing goes for "Light Up the Sky," "Mister Roberts," "Edward, My Son," and "As the Girls Go." . . . "Twofers," that scheme adapted from the old Leblang idea whereby you get two for one, is aiding some of the oldies which plan to make a stand to profit by the Christmas-New Year rush.

AS USUAL, the best spots for a gander at the stars offstage are those 44th street standbys, Sardi's and the Algonquin . . . Paying court to the Capital's Frances Starr of "The Young and Fair," you note Ernest Truex, whose "Oh, Mr. Meadowbrook" returns the Golden Theater to legit December 26 . . . Ernie's daughter—and Sylvia Field's—Sally Moffet is one of Miss Starr's all-girl company . . . Sam Levene, of "Light Up the Sky," chowing with Elspeth Eric, one of his old flames . . . It's a "Sky" hideout, Sardi's, with Barry Nelson talking television in one corner and Phyllis Povah munching salad in another . . . Jessica Tandy, of "Streetcar," catching niblets of London gossip from a newly arrived Britisher . . . John Carradine booming . . . Shirley Booth, her forlorn secretarial ways of the "Goodbye, My Fancy" matinee left in the dressing room, chats of her days in stock before the latter poohed out and before she explained just where "Oiwin" was in "Three Men on a Horse" . . . Garbo and Marlene Dietrich cause a traffic jam for the "Red Gloves" opening, on hand to see pal, C. Boyer.

THE ALGONQUIN LOBBY offers its fabulous parade before the desk of Alfred Mitchell, who's been behind it for 42 years . . . Columnist Ward Morehouse chats with Gilmore Brown, east from his famed Pasadena Playhouse . . . Publicist Bill Doll on the phone with Mae West, arranging for a carload of critics to see her play "Diamond Lil" over in Montclair . . . Guy Thomajan, Loutec of "Red Gloves," and a movie face since "Boomerang" and "Miracle on 34th Street," conning the "Gloves" morning notices, unkind to the play, glowing for Star Charles Boyer . . . Marjorie Gateson, still in make-up from a telecast, talks of the plays that have come her way, but not one is worth the fantastic production costs . . . The television schedule's tough, Margie explains . . . A half-hour show is rehearsed from 9:30 a. m. till 6 p. m. daily for 10 days to a week in advance of televising . . . Neil Hamilton has his own show on video . . . Edith Atwater and Dean Jagger dash in from a day's rehearsing for Philco's video of Bill McCleery's "Parlor Story."

VINTON FREEDLEY tells the likable Irwin Shaw that he hears Irwin has a new play . . . "I'm delighted to hear it," says Shaw, "who says?" . . . It's just more of the Broadway gossip that somehow gets into the plethora of columns . . . Everyone seems to write a column . . . Shaw remarks that IF he ever writes another play he'll remember this one's urgings to try it out on a college stage before tackling Broadway . . . "Make it C.U.," I reply . . . Urbane Mr. Freedley—a "Man of Distinction" come to life—talks proudly of ANTA's vast good works despite a complete lack of big money; most of the office force works for free . . . After Irwin leaves, Mr. Freedley remarks he's just bought "The Young Lions" for a Special Someone's Christmas.

GILBERT MILLER, in his Radio City office, talks of how the word "Academy" in ANTA (American National Theater and Academy) means most to him . . . "What we need is a great training school for our players . . . In France and England even the best players never give up their studying, even while they're acting" . . . "The whole trouble in Washington," Mr. Miller continues, "has been caused by a Communist named Wolf." . . . "She's not a communist," I reply, "and her name is Fox."

Heidt Hunt Tonight Goes Into Finals

VICE PRESIDENT-ELECT Alben W. Barkley has been invited to be guest of honor at tonight's finals of the Horace Heidt talent search in Uline Arena. The bandsman will begin his show at 8:30, with the final stage of the proceedings going on the air over the NBC network at 10:30.

The Junior Board of Commerce of Washington is sponsoring the event and Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan will determine the winner by checking the tabulations on the automatic applause meters.

Heidt's phenomenally successful talent search has taken his show across the country several times and he takes pride in having reached into cities where similar radio contests have never before ventured.

There are four finalists in tonight's program. Accordionist Dick Contino, winner of the first quarter finals, is a California lad who's won many friends across the country on Heidt's tour with his skilled fingers and ingratiating appearance.

Stanley Morse of Zanesville, Ohio, is the son of a Methodist minister and won his quarter-finals with a trombone rendition of the popular "Saber Dance."

Flint (Michigan's,) Johnny Mungal is a singer and blind Pierce Knox is a xylophonist who won his right to appear in the finals only a few weeks ago.

All four have won prizes of $750 each as well as contracts for the Heidt tour. Tonight's broadcast will decide the winner of the $5000 cash prize presented by the program's sponsor, the Philip Morris Co.

JANET LEIGH plays second fiddle to the well-loved Lassie in "Hills of Home," the Technicolor film at the Capitol, but only Star Edmund Gwenn could be logically expected to face up to that demanding task. The youngsters will like this one.

C. U. 'The Birds' In Final Week

Walter Kerr's free adaptation of Aristophanes' comedy, "The Birds," begins its final week tomorrow night in the University Theater on the Catholic University campus.

Kerr's adaptation stresses the colloquial idiom and the theatrical values with which the Greek master studded his comedy.

John Easley and Louis Camuti play the leading roles, with Joan Lea Walsh as the solo dancer. John Garvey, who also appears in the cast of 40, has written an original score for the work and the costumes have been designed by Thomas Bohen, jr. James Waring has created the settings and Dr. Josephine McGarry Callan has coached the speaking chorus.

6 Lust Theaters To Have 'Toy' Matinee Friday

SIX of the Sidney Lust Maryland theaters will present their annual toy and canned food matinees next Friday afternoon, the 17th, at 3:30. These will be the Hyattsville, Cheverly, Bethesda, Kaywood, Marlboro and Milo.

Appropriate feature films and color cartoons will be shown at each theater. The only admission price will be a toy or canned food, collected at the door. These articles will be distributed by various charity and civic organizations on the holiday to needy families.

Among the cosponsors are the Christmas Bureau of Prince Georges County, Charlie Edwards, WMAL's "Around the Town" broadcaster; the Rockville Rotary Club, the Marlboro Lions Club, the Enquirer-Gazette and WANN of Annapolis, the Holiday Exchange of Montgomery County and station WMAL.

Film at Jewish Center

"I Want to Be a Mother," an all-Jewish film starring Leo Fuchs and Cantor Leibele Waldron, will be shown twice tonight at the Jewish Community Center, 16th and Q sts., at 7 and 9 o'clock. Filmed in New York, the drama of marital life offers several musical numbers. The showings are being sponsored by the Children's Aid in Israel.

Ford's Theater Dark This Week

FORD'S Theater, Baltimore, the nearest professional legitimate theater to the National Capital, has a dark week this week which will be followed, on Monday the 20th, with a two-week run of Frank Fay in "Harvey."

This is the same company which last spring set up a record-breaking two-month run at E street's National Theater before the house turned to films.

Essay Misdirected

Thurber Emerges Fuzzy on TV

By Sonia Stein

"'AWP,' he said in the low hopeless tone of a despondent beagle—he always half suspected that something would 'get him' in the night."

It is in the printed version of James Thurber's "The Night the Ghost Got In," that his brother, Herman, said "awp." In the video version last Sunday night on "Actors' Studio" (WMAL-TV, 8:30 p. m.) nobody said "awp" in the tone of a despondent beagle. And even if someone had, it wouldn't have been particularly amusing.

To turn a humorous essay into a drama is such a profaning of its virtues, that I cannot think how anybody would attempt it. (Which is certainly not to say that no one has.)

Point Overlooked

THE events in a humorous essay—however cleverly juxtaposed in mad disorder—are not the source of its intoxicating delight. It seems downright pedantic to say that the writer's style, his choice of words and supersensitive use of punctuation make the essay what it is, and yet the point is overlooked in the most public places.

The motion picture version of Thurber's "The Secret Life of Walter Mitty" is probably the most expensive and protracted misguided effort of this kind, but "Actors' Studio" upset me because they should have learned a lesson from the Mitty movie. And if not from that, then from that miserable distortion of Stephan Leacock's "My Financial Career" which "Hallmark Playhouse" perpetrated upon an unsuspecting radio public on November 18.

The Hallmark production used the name and the bare bones of the Leacock misadventure in the bank, but added to it little flashback fantasies entirely at cross-purposes with the original.

Little Added

TO THE credit of the adapter on "Actors' Studio" let it be said that he added very little to "The Night the Ghost Got In." And, except where it was necessary to cut down on the number of sets, subtracted very little. (I think I minded most that he left out Thurber's mother's blouse, which you will recall young James put on in haste when the policemen began to eye his partly dressed torso with suspicion.)

When, in spite of this earnest effort at faithful transposition of the spirit from essay to drama the results were only mildly amusing, it's high time to admit that the best medium for a humorous essay is a humorous essay.

Let's stick to the one-act play and the short story with dramatic flavor for future video ventures, shall we?

CHARTER HESLEP has sniffed the kilowatt and is pursuing it like a youth fresh out of announcing school. After years of sitting behind a desk as the Mutual network's big wheel in Washington, Heslep finally got a chance at a microphone when he covered the presidential campaign as a special assignment, and is angling for more.

"I've watched the band go tooting down the street before, but this is the first time I've had a chance to march along and blow a trumpet," he says.

HESLEP

Heslep's journey on the Truman campaign train was not quite what the doctor ordered for Heslep who had just recovered from a heart attack, but he says he's in the market for another campaign right away to keep him in top trim.

A portly and dignified type who wears Homburg hats and once wore a Van Dyke beard with no trouble, Heslep climbed on train sheds and baggage trucks as occasion demanded for strategic placement of the microphone.

He stayed up the clock around and part way around again to get the President's first post-election radio speech exclusively for Mutual.

Currently unattached to any network, the energetic executive who has been managing editor of a metropolitan newspaper and a major personality in wartime censorship operations, wants to steer clear of desks. He's got his eye on a mike.

SIR ARTHUR WING PINERO'S "Widow of Wasdale Head" will be presented tonight at 8:30 on "Actor's Studio" on WMAL-TV. It's about a flesh and blood suitor who has to match wits with the dead husband of his lady love.

Tomorrow night's "On Trial" program will have Senator Owen Brewster (R., Maine) and Oren Root, jr., of the New York Republican Committee discussing "Should the Republican Party Be Liberalized." It's on WMAL-TV at 8 p. m. and on WMAL at 10:30 p. m.

Tonight at 9 over WNBW Dean Jagger and Edith Atwater will appear in "Parlor Story" on "Philco Television Playhouse." A comedy about a professor of journalism who gets tangled up in campus politics, it will have Miss Atwater, Paul Huber and Richard Noyes in the roles they originally created on the stage.

At the Bridge Table

Premium on Steadiness In Team-of-Four Play

By Marian H. Barre

WHILE the national championships were on last week in Miami Beach, Fla., the emphasis here was on team-of-four competition in the two leading local organizations, the Washington and the Federal Bridge Leagues. In the latter group the line-up of Roberts, Skinner, Murray and Dickerman regained their lead in the Monday match after having played second fiddle to the Steinberg-Kathan partnerships. Though minus one of their star performers the Federal "Cascades" won with an amazing percentage.

Another ranking luminary was absent when the Cotter, Spritzer, White and Murray team finished top at the Washington Bridge League on December 8, thereby consolidating an almost impregnable position.

The moral of this tale is that team-of-four competition depends not on isolated stars but a good "stock company." Each member of both teams mentioned belongs in the upper bridge brackets. Other facts to be noted are that David Murray plays on both teams, thus proving his sterling caliber, and that Mrs. Edward Cotter is sole woman to six male stalwarts.

News from the Nationals was slow seeping in . . . Still unverified when this column was written was the report that our C. C. Johnson finished second in the finals of World Masters mixed pairs playing with Mrs. Frank Meyer of Richmond. The position would give a grand boost to Charlie's master-point total. Open teams and open teams wind up the tournament program, these are the events District Celebrities Steinberg, Stone, Karpin planned to attend.

NATIONAL AWARDS will be in competition this week on Wednesday at the Washington Bridge League game at 8 p. m. in Hotel Roosevelt, and at the Stephan Club, 1355 Euclid st., at 1 p. m. Saturday.

Begun last Friday, the annual mixed pair championship of Arlington Farms will be concluded this evening, play beginning promptly at 6:30. Thirty-eight duos, the largest field up to date, took part in the club's master point game on December 3; divided into two sections the winners were as follows: Section A, Mrs. M. R. Reddy-Mrs. S. H. Klein, William Ham-Gustave Liebermann. Section B, Miss Mary Beriston-Commander O. Leibschner, Mrs. Dora Schwart-Rush Buckley.

The Agriculture Bridge Club's monthly matinee last Saturday also flourished despite the absence of the troupers en route to Florida, Mrs. J. G. Seabourne and Mrs. Millspaugh, and the Bernard Rossons captured top awards. The Rossons won with a tremendous lead over Al Camire and White while J. D. Boyd and Arthur Lane were defeated by a mere half-point.

Another master point game in this vicinity is the Buckingham Village Club monthly on Tuesday evening.

The monthly quota of national awards in competition for December at the Walsh Club were captured by Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Graham, and Mrs. Mildred Linderman and Mrs. Wessal Stewart. Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Hughes and the Warren Gardners were runners-up.

At the Count Club's December monthly on the seventh Mrs. Dora Schwartz and Col. J. G. Seabourne led the north-south field, with Mark Lake and Vernon Dunn top in the other position.

Lyle Van's News Show Hits Hard and Often

By John Crosby

LYLE VAN, who is heard on WOR in New York Mondays through Saturdays at 6 p. m., is an unusual and possibly unique radio reporter in two respects. Firstly, about 50 per cent of Van's material is dug up by Van or his legman instead of being taken from the wire services as is most radio news. Secondly, Van openly editorializes in open and so far unscathed defiance of the Federal Communications Commission ukase against editorializing by stations.

"News on the Human Side," the title of the Lyle Van show, is a WOR show and its editorials represent station policy.

Most of the crusades are on a human, noncontroversial level. It was Van who broke the story about the chiseling by ticket scalpers on circus tickets. This campaign, the result of a tip from a disgruntled ticket purchaser, led to the conviction of one ticket seller at Madison Square Garden and a wholesome investigation of the circus ticket business by the license commissioner.

Perhaps the most daring and most controversial crusade Van ever got mixed up in was a campaign against the city's golden jubilee last spring, most of which was directed against Grover Whalen.

Van and his associates felt that the appropriation of $860,000 by the city for a golden jubilee was a lot of nonsense. Van pointed out with considerable acerbity that Whalen's World's Fair had lost a fortune and predicted that the $860,000 would be largely lost, too. With the city going broke, he said, "we need a million-dollar celebration like we need a hole in the head."

This crusade brought an outraged protest from Whalen, who called Dave Driscoll, director of news at WOR, and threatened to retaliate "with any means at my command." A short time later the ad agency representing Van's sponsor called up and asked for the script of the attack on Whalen. Two weeks later, when the time came for option renewal, the sponsor dropped the show.

Meanwhile, Van (who has picked up a new sponsor) goes ahead, taking sides on local issues, digging up unusual exclusive news stories and presenting a news program that is certainly sprightly and different from others. Even the station admits that "News on the Human Side" appears to be a clear, though minor violation of the F. C. C.'s rule against editorializing. So far the commission has made no protest.

And Down Goes Quality

Music on Radio Takes a Dive

By Paul Hume

CONSIDER the estate of music on the radio these days. Such conflicting pictures thrust themselves upon you that it is hard to see if the growth of aired music is forward or backward.

Until a few seasons ago New York Philharmonic concerts were broadcast complete every Sunday afternoon. They were usually the same programs as those heard during the week in New York, and CBS could be proud of their record in continuing them so faithfully. Their large audience was just reward.

Now those programs are begun in New York 15 minutes ahead of broadcast time, and their content is watered down, to what CBS thinks the radio public wants to hear. Both new music and long works are to be avoided under the new program policy of the Sunday Philharmonic concerts. This year's broadcasts up to the present time have set a low in repertoire.

The Metropolitan Opera is broadcast as usual, the only trouble with their output being the staleness of the operas which will be as bad this year as ever. The NBC Symphony, formed to bring great conducting of great music to a hungry audience, is cut to an hour. As on Philharmonic programs, much desirable material is unplayed, and lack of time often requires undue haste in performing listed compositions.

Programs Curtailed

CERTAIN great programs of music have been curtailed, eliminated entirely, or put at such late and obscure hours as to be out of reach of audiences for which they were designed. CBS' Invitation to Music, for a time the most distinguished musical series on the air, is a thing of the past. It died after being shoved into an 11:30 p. m. spot on Wednesday nights.

Programs emanating from network headquarters are not always carried by local station.

The most recent example of this was the failure of a Washington TV station to carry the opening of the Metropolitan Opera, with Verdi's "Othello." They had a prior commitment to display a boxing match. (Four other TV outlets ran the same match!) Yet TV supporters speak of it as a potential channel for mature entertainment. It still has to show signs of changing its voice. Adulthood is miles off.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has recently switched from an hour's concert Tuesday evenings to a half-hour rehearsal show. Local NBC outlet is not yet sure when they will carry this, but probably will run it in conflict with the Metropolitan Saturday afternoon jamboree. Nice, no?

Few Good Song Recitals

THINGS one never hears on the air are good song recitals—decently planned programs of piano music—or carefully devised children's orchestral concerts. We are grateful for E. Power Biggs' organ music even though we cannot indorse his personal style of playing.

In the field of recorded broadcasts, Washington can be happy and proud of its WQQW. To their honors is now added the great news that their FM station will carry all concerts from the Library of Congress. But night after night, for 6 hours at a time, WQQW plays, on its FM channel, recorded concerts of the finest in music. Sponsors who make these programs possible deserve every commendation.

The phonograph and recorded broadcasts are becoming the only resort of many who find live music on the air broken up, mutilated, immature, and foolishly repetitive and competitive. This is a bad situation from which radio, with FM and television, ought to rescue itself. The muddled confusion which results in duplication and competition in programming could be worked out with intelligent planning. The poverty of material presented will remain much as it is now until the public wants it changed.

The Music Box

Potter Choir Again Doing 'Messiah'

WASHINGTON CHORAL SOCIETY under Louis Potter brings "Messiah" to Constitution Hall again this week. Soloists include Barbara Stevenson for her third annual appearance here, Lydia Summers, contralto, Howard Jarratt, tenor, and Robert Nicholson, baritone.

SUMMERS

National Symphony programs Mahler's great song symphony, "Das Lied von der Erde" for Wednesday night, with Nell Tangeman, mezzo, and Harold Haugh, tenor.

Theodore Schaefer and the National Presbyterian Choir sings two parts of Bach's Christmas Oratorio today, in a welcome departure from "Messiah." Other Christmas music is listed by New York Avenue Presbyterian Church tonight, and Gallinger Hospital's nursing school on Tuesday evening at 8 in their gymnasium auditorium.

OTHER noteworthy progsams this week include today's All Souls' Unitarian recital at 5, Nancy Walters, songs tonight for the Rybier Club, Fanny Henbest's piano program tomorrow night at Phillips and the Friday Morning Music Club conclave this week.

The Hungarian Quartet makes its Washington debut Saturday evening in the annual Stradivarius program at the Library of Congress. This is an unsurpassed ensemble in a top program.

Helen Thigpen, Washington soprano, will sing today at Lincoln Congregational Temple, 1701 11th st. nw. Time and program unavailable.

The Record Player

Szell Gives Dvorak a Fine Reading

DVORAK: Slavonic Dances. Cleveland Symphony under George Szell. Columbia 756. $4.75.

Szell is Czech. He has that burning devotion to his native land which adds indefinable quality to the playing of five of the finest of these dances. In modern recording, this is the best group of these popular works we now have on records. But if you love them, don't overlook the complete recordings of the Czech Philharmonic under Talich.

Vaughan Williams: Fantasy on a Theme of Thomas Tallis. Minneapolis Symphony under Mitropoulos. Columbia MX 300. $3.50.

Mitropoulos has enormous gifts for conducting certain kinds of music. This noble fantasy is unfortunately not one of them. It requires a sense of repose which has always been absent from the tempestuous

BRUNO WALTER
. . . he could do it

Greek composer's direction. It also needs a greater feeling of contrast without sudden accents than Minneapolis gives it.

Adrian Boult made a sonorous recording some years ago, but it lacked the inner feeling of the score. In other words, we still need the definitive pressing. Bruno Walter could do it, or Monteux.

STRAUSS: Elektra, excerpts. Royal Philharmonic under Beecham, with Erna Schleuter Ljuba Welitsch, Walter Widdop, Paul Schoeffler and chorus. Victor 1247. $6.

Here is some of the greatest music of this century. Elektra is not all of the stature of its towering moments, but this final scene contains most of its profound impact.

Beecham is, and always has been, a superb Strauss conductor, though little known in America as such. His work with the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra in this set is one of the most imposing pieces of conducting of my knowledge. The recording is magnificent. The brasses alone produce stunning sounds.

Schleuter is a wretched singer and her choice for Elektra is a tragedy. Even so get the set. Welitsch comes to the Metropolitan this year. The voice is a bit edgy, with some vibrato which will no doubt get worse, but as Chrysothemis she is persuasive. Widdop has sung a long time, but manages well as Aegisthus. Paul Schoeffler is a resonant Orestes, in fine vein. But the motility of conducting and the greatness of the orchestral and choral sound, in some of the most moving writing of our time is a wonderful thing to have on records at last. These are first recordings from Elektra. We trust that they will be followed by others.

New Exhibit Of Sculpture At Corcoran

AN exhibition of sculpture by Grace Turnbull of Baltimore is the fifth in a series of one-man shows by contemporary American artists put on by the Corcoran Gallery. It will be on view to January 9. Miss Turnbull has exhibited widely in this country and abroad and is the winner of many awards. A selection of drawings and photographs of works not included will be shown to give wider coverage.

Among the new openings is a jury-selected group show by members of the Artists Cooperative at the United Nations Club Works were chosen by Hermann Williams, Director of the Corcoran, and the painters Alexander Clayton and Theodore Kane. The Barnett Aden Gallery will show through January a group of abstract paintings by I. Rice Pereira in a variety of experimental media.

Fantasy is the title of the successful little group exhibition at the Whyte Gallery, which introduces fresh material by well-known Washington and Baltimore painters and adds some new names to its roster.

Woodcuts and monotypes by Adja Yunkers will be shown at the Smithsonian Division of Graphic Arts until January 2. Born in Riga, Latvia, Yunkers studied in Leningrad, Paris, Berlin, and London.

The Pan American Union has assembled a loan collection of Latin American religious paintings dating from the sixteenth to the nineteenth centuries. From museums and private collections are works which originated in Ecuador, Guatemala, Mexico, Peru and Venezuela.

Henceforth the Dupont Theater will hold continuing art exhibitions, under the supervisory of an advisory board composed of Jacob Kainen, curator of graphic arts of the Smithsonian; Beatrice Rudes, dean of the Institute of Contemporary Arts, and Alonzo Aden, director of the Barnett-Aden Gallery. The first show will open December 15.

Paintings by Lee Gatch, well-known American artist, will continue on view at the Watkins Gallery, American University, through December 18.

The Eliot O'Hara exhibition of water colors at Chequire House, Alexandria, has been held over until December 31.

'Landmark in Art History'

Kokoschka Show Called an Event

"Tower Bridge," an oil by Oskar Kokoschka, currently on exhibition at the Phillips Memorial Gallery

By Jane Watson Crane

THANKS to the Phillips Memorial Gallery Washington is one of the five cities in this country to view the Kokoschka retrospective exhibition. It will be looked back upon as a landmark in the art history of our time.

Over 40 years ago in Vienna an architect, Adolf Loos, recognized in a young artist the promise of greatness. He backed his faith in Kokoschka with support that was both moral and material. The painter in later years has paid full tribute to the contribution made to his career by this man of perception who was an artist himself in every sense of the word. It is a prime example of the right kind of backing given at the right time.

Born in an Austrian village more than 60 years ago, the painter is now living in London. Restless by nature, some of his frequent travels were of his own choosing. But the journeys from Berlin to Prague to England were enforced by the political conditions which have effected the lives of most of Europe's independent contemporary artists.

Badly wounded in the First World War, he was one of the group whose work was marked for extinction by Hitler at the start of the second. Considering that a third of his paintings were lost on the Continent, it is remarkable that so large an assemblage has survived for display in this country now. Included in the exhibition at the Phillips are number of early portraits, landscapes and figure compositions of the 'twenties, the Masaryk portrait and other paintings of the years in Prague, works done in England during and after the war, and a series of majestic mountain landscapes done on his return to Switzerland for a visit in 1947.

Not for Squeamish

THE SHOW constitutes a human record that is not for the squeamish. Almost none of the portraits are pleasing, and some, particularly of the later years, are downright painful. The closest he comes to tranquillity is in his color compositions that rise to snow-capped mountain peaks or in his river paintings which give promise of widening to the sea. He uses dissonance in color as many modern composers use it in sound. Beginning in his early work with the sparest employment of paint against silhouetted figures, he ends with splashing his oils over canvasses that are literally built with color.

At times in his life Kokoschka has written more than he has painted, his writings ranging from plays to political tracts. Of his work he has said, "I simply wanted to create around me a world of my own in which I could survive the progressive disruption going on all over the world." Of the plastic arts, "Only vision is fundamental, not theory."

Fine Catalog

THE SHOW is accompanied by a handsome catalog, with generous use of reproductions in color and black and white. Printed therein is a letter from the artist to James Plaut of the Institute of Contemporary Art in Boston, who assembled the exhibition; the catalog also contains a summary of the painter's life and a brief discussion of his works. Finally, there is a selected bibliography of Kokoschka's own writings and those about him. The development of art catalogs in this country during recent years is a story in itself. By judicious selection one can build a good art library from this source alone.

There has already been issued in English a comprehensive volume on Kokoschka by Edith Hoffmann, published in London by Faber & Faber in 1947.

Besides the paintings upstairs, examples of Kokoschka's graphic work are shown in the print rooms below. Throughout, the exhibition is strong fare. The expression is often bitter. There are few works one could live with comfortably. But for us the show was a memorable experience, an invitation to think about the individual and the circumstances that made it.

The Washington Philatelist

Is It Possible to Publish Cheaper Stamp Catalog?

By William M. Stuart

THE stamp catalog is absolutely essential to the stamp collector. During the past few years the Standard Catalog, published by Scott in two volumes, has advanced in price. The cost of the catalog has caused quite a problem to collectors, especially the beginner. He must have a catalog if he is to be a successful philatelist.

It has been suggested that a cheaper catalog be issued, although the prices of many rare and scarce items which the average collector would like to obtain must be eliminated. Catalogs of recent years are valuable check lists to all collectors.

The expense of preparing a catalog is enormous and the average publisher is unable to produce a worth-while catalog at a lesser price.

With a cheaper catalog suggested, the next step would be to form a concrete plan covering all essential features of a standard catalog—one which will be within the purchasing power of all. A catalog to retail at $1 or less may not be within the range of a publisher, but the present large cost brings the question of a cheaper catalog to the front.

A NEW sales list at the Philatelic Agency dated December 1 contains several new regulations, the most important being that relating to the handling of plate numbers. Hereafter entire sheets must be purchased if plate numbers are desired, the former regulation being that a certain number of stamps being necessary to secure the desired plate numbers. Now an entire sheet must be purchased in order to obtain plate numbers. The rule is as follows:

PLATE NUMBERS. To expedite the filling of orders and to conserve available stock for the better accommodation of patrons, the sale of plate numbers is restricted to full sheets in all denominations, except the $1 Migratory-Bird Hunting stamp, plate numbers or other markings of which may be obtained in blocks of four.

Another new regulation, No. 3, relates to changes in postal rates for return mail orders. There is an incerase of postage over former returns, the fee for a $5 or less order now being 25 cents as against 20 cents. An order of from $400 to $500 is now $1 for postage instead of 95 cents.

THERE were 476,573 cancellations of the 3-cent Juliette Low 3-cent commemorative stamp at Savannah, Ga., on October 29, and 835,150 stamps sold. On Nov. 5, El Paso, Tex., first day of the 3-cent Fort Bliss stamp, there were 421,000 cancellations and 720,989 stamps sold. There were 374,090 cancellations, first day on November 9, at Athens, Ga., of the 3-cent Moina Michael commemorative and 719, 812 stamps sold.

AN AUCTION was held at the meeting of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S.P.A., Tuesday evening in Pythian Temple, Ellery Denison officiating. Svend Yort presented a report on rules for the library and called attention to the fact of the importance of adding philatelic material now while members have old matter on hand. There will be another meeting on Tuesday evening in Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw.

The Capital Precancel Club will meet tomorrow evening at the home of H. E. F. Hawkins, 521 Park Central, 1900 F st. nw. The meeting scheduled for December 27 will be omitted.

The Capital City Post Card Club meets in the Thomson School, 12th and L sts. nw., on the first and third Monday evenings of each month. The next meeting will be held on December 20.

The Commonwealth of Australia issued a 4½d stamp to commemorate the Pan-Pacific Scout Jamboree to be held at Yarra Brae Wonga Park, Victoria, from December 29 to January 9, 1949, inclusive. The stamp features a waist-length portarit of a Scout in uniform with a stand of eucalyptus trees in the lower right-hand background. The Word "Postage" is across the top of the stamp with "Pan-Pacific Scout Jamboree 1948-1949" in the upper left-hand corner. The denomination is shown at the upper right and "Australia" across the bottom of the stamp. The stamp is red, printed in sheets of 160 perforated 17 by 15, arranged horizontally. The watermark is multiple crown C. of A.

Voice of a House

Frederic Worlock, veteran British actor, who has played opposite Laurette Taylor, Grace George and Florence Reed on the stage, has the most unusual assignment of his career. As the narrator he is the voice of the house, which is the setting of much of the action in Samuel Goldwyn's RKO Radio release, "Enchantment," starring David Niven, Teresa Wright, Evelyn Keyes and Farley Granger.

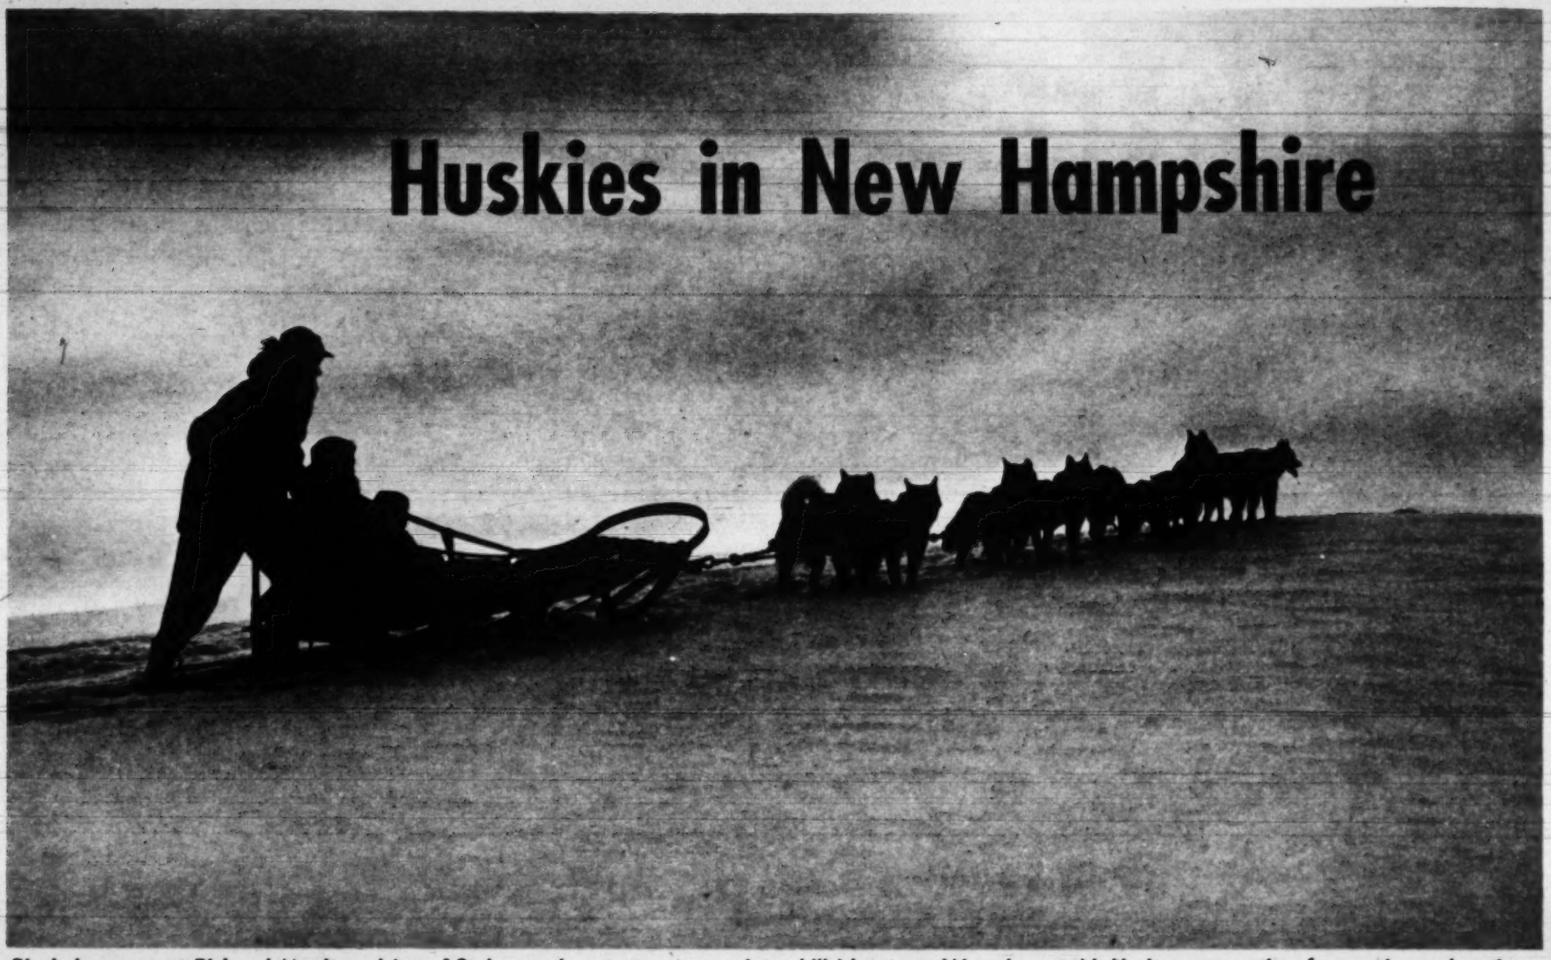
Huskies in New Hampshire



Sled-dog expert Richard Moulton drives 10-dog malemute team up wintry hillsides near Wonalancet, N. H., in preparation for arctic explorations.

A Yankee trainer raises dogs for travel across the snowy wastes near the poles

IF YOU'RE IN WONALANCET, N. H., and hear a man shout "Mush!" you need not fear that you are caught in the middle of a drive to sell a new breakfast food. It is apt to be leathery, 30-year-old arctic explorer Dick Moulton driving one of his teams of sled dogs that look as though they had just stepped out of a movie about the great Klondike gold rush.

The automobile and tractor may have displaced the horse in temperate zones, but for some time to come the heavily furred and muscled husky will remain king in the trackless snow near the poles.

Moulton, who has driven them on expeditions in Baffin Land, Greenland, Labrador, the Canadian Northwest, and with Admiral Byrd in the antarctic, raises and trains them for other explorers at his Chinook Kennels situated high in the White Mountains. The site was originally a training camp for Army K-9 heroes during the war.

His specially trained Alaskan malemutes and Eskimo dogs, ranging from 65 to 80 pounds apiece, and the somewhat lighter Siberian huskies, can pull twice their weight on broad-runner birch or ash sleds. A 10-dog team can haul an average of 1,400 pounds, not including the 100-pound sled.

Would-be arctic explorers who want to travel overland can buy them from him for from $50 to $150.

Harnessing up, Moulton and his 24-year-old wife, Maxine, adjust web straps that hitch the dogs to sled.

"Mushing" along back roads, Moulton and helper race teams to develop speed and stamina needed in wilds.

Growing up together, Marlee Moulton, two, and pup romp in snow. She drives her own dog team. THE END.

The Turning Point

Rise Stevens

Opera star will never forget an incident in Prague

ON AN EMPTY, dim-lit stage of the Prague Opera House one gray, autumn evening in 1938 stood a young mezzo-soprano—Rise Stevens—auditioning "Connais Tu Le Pays" from "Mignon." As she hit the aria's dramatic highlight, there came a sudden "Thank you very much" from the dark auditorium where sat the opera company's critical directors.

In tears, Rise fled. With this latest of countless disappointments, she wanted nothing more than the comfort of her folks in their modest Long Island home. A rest, perhaps, then a new career.

On Prague's chill railroad platform, Rise recalled advice given when she studied at Julliard School of Music "You aren't quite glamorous enough for opera," she was told. "Better that you concentrate on a concert career." She recalled, too, years of sacrifice when she struggled ever harder—sometimes with the help of an instructor, more frequently secretly and alone—to prove her critics wrong. It wasn't easy, either, to forget dozens of fruitless auditions.

"Thank heaven, we finally found you! WHERE are you going?" asked a voice behind her. "Home to America," came Rise's listless reply as she turned to face three panting dignitaries from the opera house. "Oh, no you're not! You're going to make your debut in 'Mignon.'" Grasping the wall for support, Rise realized she had mistaken Europe's affirmative "Thank you" for a polite American refusal.

"These two guys want pineapple. The fellow on the end wants chocolate, and I'll have strawberry."

Challenging issues are slated for discussion as parents and teen-agers face each other at a Parent-Youth Clinic, held in Teaneck, N. J., high school.

Parent-Youth Clinic in Action

Fathers, mothers and their teen-age children tackle family problems in panel debate

BY KARL KOHRS

A HIGH SCHOOL BOY EXPLAINS: "My father gives me an allowance of $4.00 a week. With that, I have to buy my school supplies and lunches, and go on dates. How can I get more spending money?"

A teen-age girl declares: "I have my driver's license, but my parents still don't approve of my driving the car. How can we solve this problem?"

A parent says: "My son goes with a good crowd, and I like all his friends. Yet he resents it when I set a definite hour for him to return home at night. How can we get together on this matter?"

Problems like this confront parents and children everywhere, and many a family dinner-table discussion is devoted to trying to solve them. It recently occurred to a group of staff workers in the Bergen County, N. J., YMCA that parents and children alike would benefit by thrashing out their problems in open meeting. To that end, they inaugurated the YMCA Parent-Youth Clinic, a new and unique type of community forum. A series of 50 Clinics is being conducted throughout Bergen County, where they will reach more than 10,000 parents and children.

The Parent-Youth Clinic is not just another informal get-together in a church social hall or a high school auditorium. Its operation is planned down to the last detail by personnel trained in directing group activities. In order to give the discussion a practical give-and-take value, parents and their own children are put on the panel together. The audience is invited to take part.

Originators of the Clinic recommend that it be operated through organized community groups, members of which are experienced in parliamentary procedure. These organizations can include Hi-Y, Tri-Hi-Y, church or high school clubs. The groups should always be co-ed, because teen-age boys and girls have common problems. The panel is put primarily in the hands of the youngsters by having a high school boy or girl serve as moderator.

A vital step in planning a Clinic is a preliminary meeting of several parents and children who are to appear on the panel. This serves to "break the ice," and gives them a chance to formulate a series of questions that will spark discussion at the Clinic itself. Questions are usually typed out on cards, to be read and discussed individually. Clinic periods usually run for an hour.

HAROLD M. DAVISON, president of the Central Atlantic Area Council of YMCA's, says of the Parent-Youth Clinic: "Juvenile court judges say that the trouble is not so much delinquent youth as it is delinquent parents! The clinic brings parents and youth together to promote better understanding."

The idea of a clinical approach to problems that face parents and their children recommended itself to staff workers as a result of their constant association with community activities. Most urgently needed, in the opinion of Everett W. Harding, executive secretary of the Bergen County YMCA, is a common plane of discussion. Contact with teen-agers, he observes, quickly reveals that youth behavior patterns, or codes of conduct, are often formed in the local drug store, on the school bus, in the locker room or on the street corner. The group or "the gang" is a powerful force—for better or worse. Its members may formulate one code of conduct, while their parents adhere to another. The two codes may be at variance, or even in conflict. "Talking it over" can often bridge the gulf between them.

It is not the function of the Clinic to establish codes of conduct. It operates to bring parents and their children together to exchange opinions, problems and philosophies. One group of young people has expressed the Clinic's purpose in this way: "To find solutions to problems most often met in home life today by parents and their teen-age children, and to set up standards for others to follow."

Dates, hours, car use and allowances get Clinic "treatment"

Bob Fenner, 17, moderator (standing): "I feel that our Clinic has helped strengthen relationships between parents and children of our clubs. I'd like to see this sort of thing spread throughout our country and the world. It would help insure the peace we are trying to obtain."

"I believe that the average teen-ager pays his board by doing work around the house. If he can't find time to do household jobs, he should make time. Parents should tell their children what they are expected to do during the week, so that they can plan their time accordingly."

"If a girl really wants to go to college and has scholastic ability, she should be allowed to go. Even if she marries soon afterward, it is not wasted, as a good education can be of benefit both to herself and to her husband. In an emergency, it can help her to earn a living."

"If an allowance based on family income is insufficient, it should be supplemented by outside work . . . Parents have first claim to the family car, which should be used for necessary driving, not joyriding . . . College is desirable if the child is a fair student and wants to attend."

"The family car, like the bathroom, should be shared, not monopolized. We share the car with our son for out-of-town athletic events, club work and an occasional 'horsing around'. For the latter, he's been known to buy a tank of gas—evidently collecting from his passengers."

A New Jersey panel deliberates

A PARENT-YOUTH CLINIC held at the Teaneck, N. J., High School showed how effective an open forum of parents and children can be. Conducted by the Teaneck Hi-Y and Tri-Hi-Y clubs, its agenda was devoted to two basic issues: "What children expect of their parents," and "What parents expect of their children." A lad of 17 served as moderator, with the assistance of another boy and two girls, all about his own age. An audience of some 150 adults and teen-agers took an active part in the proceedings.

"Perhaps we parents are guilty of using too much imagination," a father observed during a discussion of codes of behavior. "We assume that, because we managed to keep out of trouble when we were young, it should be easy for our children to choose between right and wrong. But we must not be too critical. We must consider the element of experience."

The youngsters "ganged up" on the parental panel on the question of the use of the family car, the consensus being that they were old enough to be trusted with it. They listened thoughtfully, however, when a mother asked: "If my son insists on having the car for his personal use, can I expect him to share the insurance and repair bills?"

On the burning issue of dating, one parent asked why it was that a boy invariably neglected to introduce his current girl friend to his father and mother.

"In my case," volunteered a boy, "my girl friends are only temporary, so I never bother. By temporary, I mean . . . well, that is . . ."

"Are you bragging," the moderator interrupted with a grin, "or just answering the question?"

Dating naturally brought up the question of late hours. Parents registered their flat disapproval of late hours during the week, on the grounds that it impaired a child's health as well as his grades. The youth panel argued for more leeway on Friday and Saturday nights, but they were not entirely successful in convincing the other side that 2 a.m. was still within reasonable limits.

"As Long as We Know Where Our Children are"

"IT'S NOT THAT we're unwilling to make exceptions," said one father. "In fact, we don't worry too much as long as we know where our children are."

The panel then went on to exchange views on whether or not a college education is necessary. Teen-agers were unanimous in declaring that a high school education is not sufficient today.

"Some parents are old-fashioned, and don't realize that times have changed," a girl said. "Nowadays, for instance, a girl has to be on equal terms with the boy she's thinking of marrying. I don't think she can be, if he has a college education, and she hasn't."

A boy added that a college education gave one a broader outlook on life. A college-trained boy and girl, he said, would have a much better chance to "think things out together."

College is a step that needs careful thought and planning a long time in advance, was one mother's opinion. Any child who wanted to go to college, she said, owed it to his parents to prove that he didn't consider it merely a lark away from home.

The discussion proceeded to the question of allowances. Here, the panel got down to figures. A weekly allowance of $3.50, for example, suggested by a boy, was considered inadequate. A girl promptly broke down this figure into average expenditures for lunches and incidentals. Displaying the familiar feminine instinct for logic in matters of this kind, she pointedly reminded her fellow panel-member that the balance of perhaps a dollar at the end of the week would be somewhat less than adequate for movies and sodas with his girl friend. A $7.00 allowance, on the contrary, was conceded by parents—and children as well—to be out of line. A father cited the rising cost of food and clothing in contending that the $7.00 figure was beyond the means of the average family man. A youngster in the audience got up and convincingly argued for a $5.00 allowance, which most of the panel accepted as a fair compromise. One parent observed that most fathers and mothers were inclined to be lenient in the matter of allowances, and that the important thing was to teach the children the value of a dollar. It was agreed that the problem would be simplified if parents explained the family budget to their children. The latter would then be able to adjust their needs accordingly.

'A boy of 17 or 18 should have some income of his own to supplement his usual allowance. The allowance itself should be regulated to the family budget, which should be made known to the entire family. Parents and children should try to understand each other's financial problems."

"Even with a busy schedule of school and other activities, I think youngsters—and not just girls, either—should have home duties assigned to them. There is no reason why a boy should not keep his belongings in order. Sharing a home means sharing its responsibilities, too."

Both sides argued at length over whether or not children should be paid for doing work around the house. Some teen-agers were in favor of pay. One parental viewpoint was that children are taught too late to assume responsibility—they should learn at six, not at 16, that they must willingly perform their share of household tasks. The moderator asked if parents in general had trouble in getting children to do work about the house.

"Well, at my house, the grass was growing that high," a father remarked, indicating with his hand, as the audience roared with laughter, "so I had to hire a power mower and do the job myself."

Clinic is Adaptable to Any Community

INFORMAL AND INTIMATE discussion such as this is one of the primary purposes of the Parent-Youth Clinic. Although it is still in the early stages of development, it has attracted nation-wide attention; and inquiries about it have come from such widely-separated points as Oregon and Texas. The fact that it involves no expense and requires no "imported" experts makes it adaptable to any community, large or small. Sponsors and educators who are following the progress of the Parent-Youth Clinic have found that it functions best in the hands of those for whom it was created—parents and children who are trying to understand each other's daily problems.

Paddle-Ball Champ: Randy Brown

At 30, he has trouped the globe, literally bouncing himself to fame

After seven years of arduous practice, Randy has perfected the trick of controlling four balls at the same time so that they all appear to be sailing through the air with greatest of ease.

ENTERTAINER GOT HIS START BY EXHIBITING ACT IN STORE WINDOWS

IT TOOK RANDY BROWN three hours and 45 minutes to bounce a rubber ball against a plywood paddle 22,000 times without error. That feat established him as the world's greatest exponent of paddle-ball.

As a boy, Randy realized that perfection might be achieved through practice. Thus, while most youngsters were adhering to the daily cry of, "You can't go out and play until you've practiced your violin, Sonny," or, "It's time for your piano lesson, Sis," ten-year-old Randy Brown of Atlanta, Ga., was busy learning entirely different lessons. In his back yard, he was devoting a good part of each day to trying out varying lengths of elastic between a paddle and a sponge rubber ball, then practicing difficult tricks.

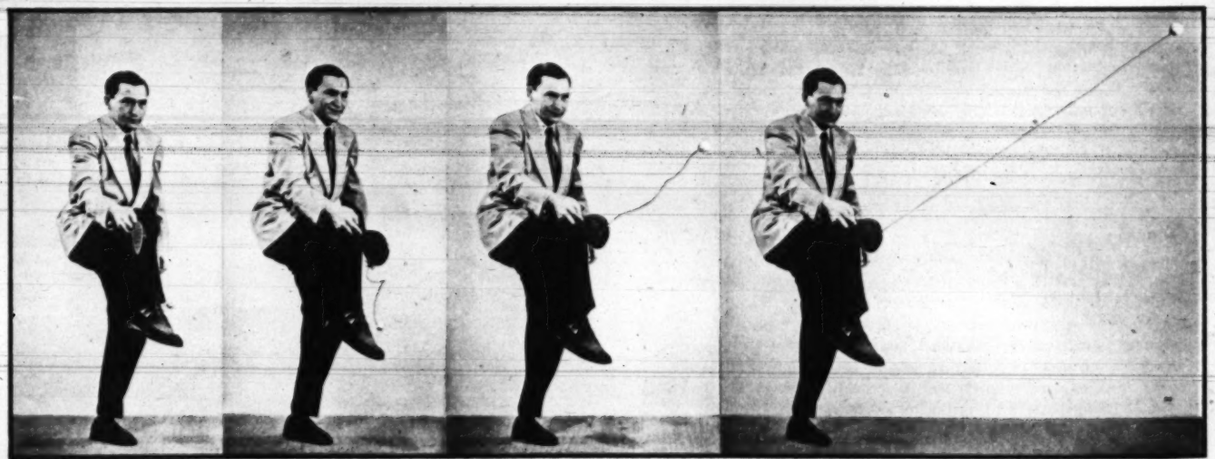
He has Toured the World

Before he was twelve, young Brown was so deft at maneuvering the paddle-ball set that he was earning $75 a week for demonstrating his skill in Atlanta's store windows. He soon moved on to fairs, theatres and night clubs. Today, at 30, he has already toured the world with his specialized act, and as a member of the Air Force during the war, made the camp rounds here and abroad.

Called "Paddle-ball," or "Hi-li," "Bo-lo," and "Fly-back," the game has developed into a big industry. Over ten million paddle-ball-sets are manufactured yearly.

"To get the best results," Randy advises all paddle-ball players, "use the best elastic. The rest depends on the way you control your wrist movement and balance the paddle."

This "Football" number looks simple but it took Randy many years to perfect



The "toe dance" calls for controlled knee-and-toe action in perfect rhythm to background music. Randy claims that because of strong back-pull of elastic tether, it takes as much exertion to kick his little rubber ball 15 feet as it does to kick a football 50 yards.

Four New Dishes

By Beth Merriman

NO ONE WANTS TO SKIMP on Christmas! New ornaments for the tree, just the right gift for everyone, all done up in pretty wrappings, cards for a list that happily expands each year, the tree itself and wreaths at the windows—that's where the money goes! So we thought you'd be doubly interested in four new recipes, that are both budget-wise and delicious, for use between now and the holidays. No one will guess that you are really economizing, because you can serve these tempting dishes with pride!

DEVILED MACARONI

1 pkg. (8 oz.) elbow macaroni
1 can deviled sandwich spread
1 cup grated American cheddar cheese
1 can condensed tomato soup

Cook macaroni in boiling salted water until tender; drain. Rinse with hot water. In a greased casserole arrange a layer of macaroni, then a very thin layer of deviled sandwich spread, then a layer of tomato soup, just as it comes from the can, then a layer of grated cheese. Repeat until all ingredients are used, ending with grated cheese. Bake in moderate oven, 350°F., 30 minutes. Yield: 6 generous servings.

The recipe for this thrifty and delicious dish was sent in by Mrs. L. B. Trone, First Methodist Church, Carlsbad, New Mexico. It can be expanded to serve a crowd.

FRIDAY FAVORITE

1 tablespoon mayonnaise
1 teaspoon mustard
6 flounder fillets
¼ lb. processed cheese food
1 8-oz. can tomato sauce
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
⅔ cup bread crumbs

Combine mayonnaise and mustard; spread on fish fillets. Cut cheese in 6 pieces; roll each fillet around a piece of cheese; fasten with toothpicks. Place on platter; pour tomato sauce over all. Dot with butter or margarine. Sprinkle with crumbs. Bake in moderate oven, 375°F., 30 minutes.

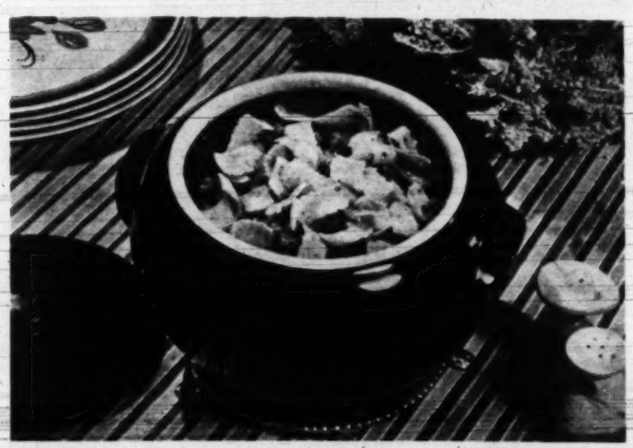
A most unusual and economical main dish, submitted by Mrs. Al Magill, 4225 Leidy Avenue, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, for your enjoyment on Friday or any other day.

SOUTHERN VEGETABLE SHORTCAKE

½ cup grated American cheddar cheese
3 cups well-seasoned white sauce
1 cup cooked lima beans
1 cup cooked carrots
½ cup cooked celery
6 squares hot cornbread (made with corn muffin mix) paprika, parsley

Add cheese to white sauce; stir over hot water until cheese melts. Add vegetables; heat thoroughly. Split squares of cornbread; butter lightly. Place hot vegetable mixture between layers and on top. Sprinkle with paprika; garnish with parsley. Yield: 6 generous servings.

Here is a hearty, meatless main dish for luncheon or supper that the whole family will enjoy, submitted by Mrs. Mary Newman, 165 Fifteenth Avenue, Columbus, Ohio.



MOCK ENCHILADA

1 lb. hamburger
2 tablespoons fat
⅓ cup chopped onion
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
1 can chili con carne
1 package corn chips
½ lb. American cheddar cheese, diced

Stir hamburger in hot fat until browned. Add onion; cook until soft. Add salt, pepper, chili con carne. Mix well. Place alternate layers of corn chips, chili mixture and diced cheese in greased casserole, ending with corn chips. Bake in moderate oven, 350°F., 15 minutes. Yield: 6 servings.

Hollywood Specialists

By ERNEST LA FRANCE and SID ROSS

Photographs by Ben Ross

ANOTHER INSTALLMENT in PARADE's series of articles on Hollywood and the movie industry will be published next week. Future issues will discuss what its critics think about Hollywood and the special problems it must meet.—Kay Sullivan, Movie Editor, Parade.

ON THE SCREEN, a deadly German dive-bomber spots an Allied foxhole on the Normandy beachhead, peels off and plunges like a hawk, its machine-guns whipping a lethal dotted line across the sand.

In the studio, a few feet away from the foxhole a technician calmly gets up from an instrument resembling a telephone switchboard, shakes the sand from the towel covering his hair, looks at the director, and gets ready to do it all over again.

He is Eddie Cavert, "powderman" in Warner Bros. Special Effects Department, and one of the men who help make Hollywood's movies realistic. Faking machine-gun fire is old stuff to him. He merely spaces small charges of explosives at regular intervals, wires them up to the switchboard (called a "striker") and fires them electrically by running his hand over the switches. Sometimes it takes a dozen tries before the sand blows right to suit the director..

Given sufficient notice, Cavert and his cohorts can simulate everything from a crackshot cowboy splitting a beer glass (some movie cowboys can't hit a barn door) to an eruption of Vesuvius. Other specialists can make rain, snow, cobwebs, monsoons, jungles, bird songs, 10-foot waves, hoof-beats and simulate sex appeal and old age better than Nature.

Seldom known outside the studios—although department heads usually get mention in the long list of credits at the start of a picture—they are among the last craftsmen in an industry long since succumbed to the ways of mass production. Usually paid by the hour (Cavert gets $2.92 after 11 years at Warner's) and in constant demand for one job or another, they spend almost all their waking hours perfecting their skill and dreaming up new ways to make you think you see something really happening.

Without them, Hollywood's movies would be impossible. They are the men who make the make-believe.

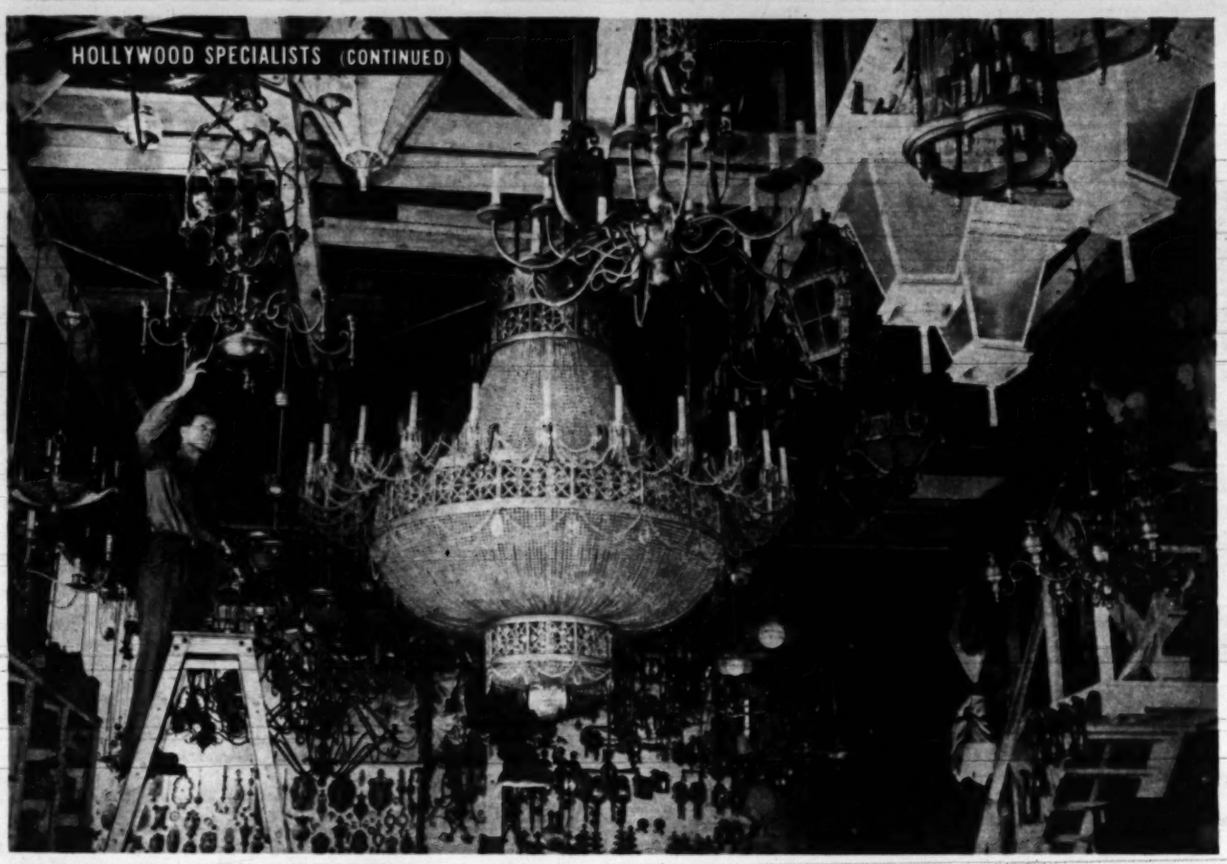
Tired of menu planning? For helpful hints turn to food editor Beth Merriman today and every Sunday in PARADE. Don't miss PARADE's tempting recipes.



LIGHTING & MECHANICAL EFFECTS CHIEF Robert Martin has over million dollars worth of fixtures for everything from castles to mud huts. At Warner's for 25 years, he and 13 assistants have turned out fake radar sets, weird "scientific" apparatus and weirder X-Ray "guns."

"Anything Nature can do we do better" is motto of movies' creators of realism

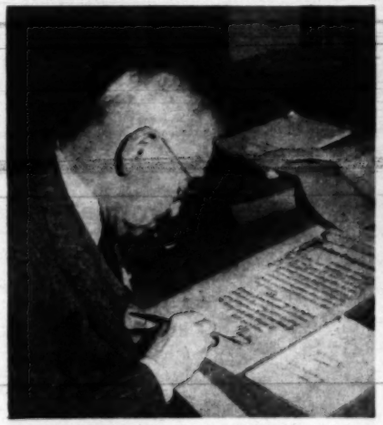
KING-PIN OF CREATING ILLUSION in any Hollywood movie is the Art Director, a title that is a wild understatement. Art Directors, who must be able to dream up settings for everything from harem girls to Admiral Nelson at Trafalgar, must combine the talents of an architect, historian, interior decorator, construction engineer, poet, and stage designer and have the worldly knowledge of an editor of the National Geographic. Warner's Edward Carrere gets a king-size salary and is worth it. One of Warner's recent pictures called for 113 different sets —too many for even Warner's 22 sound stages. Carrere got around it by mounting doors and windows on wheels and rushing them around to the proper actors to walk or look through. A bug for accuracy, he once tore up a photographed background for a New York scene because he heard a new building had gone up in the block. Few New Yorkers would have noticed.

To help him decorate his sets, Carrere calls on the Prop Department, a sort of company museum. If the desired article isn't there, the specialists in the Research Dept. find out what fits. Other specialists make it up. A typical picture requires some 2,300 photos and drawings and interviews with 450 experts.

To make Warner's "Submarine D-1," builders Clyde Losing, Archie Eggenweiler and Wallace Manning made a 26-foot scale-model sub from blueprints, plus a full-size conning-tower.

Earl Hays, printer of what Hollywood calls newspaper "inserts" seldom has a circulation of over 15, but his phony pages with scare headlines are seen all over the world. His collection of genuine "samples" has two million items in every printed language and goes back to the year 1611.

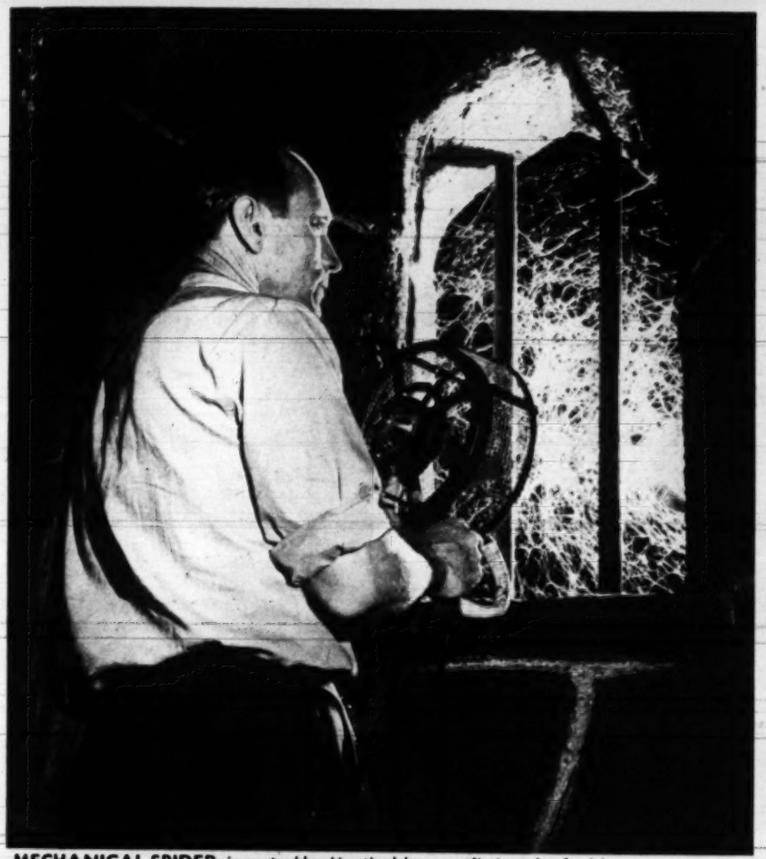
Weather specialists create blizzards by blowing powdered ice through nozzles, fog with atomized oil and dry ice, softly falling snow with potato meal or corn-flakes, and snowbanks with papier-mâché and gypsum. Trees, unless they grow nearby, are made from cloth—like the mangroves in "Key Largo." Although almost everything else has been tried, "blood" is still chocolate syrup. Rain, in Hollywood as elsewhere, is water. From pipes.



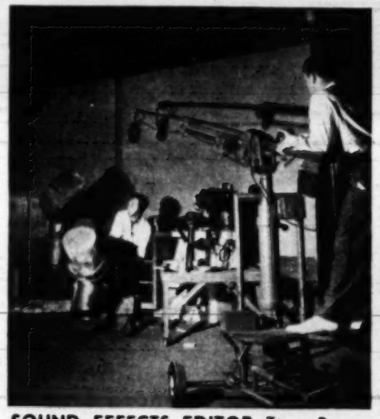
HANDWRITING EXPERT Griffith Ellis "forges" famous names on documents.

ART DIRECTOR Edward Carrere, discussing model with Gary Cooper and Patricia Neal, designs sets.

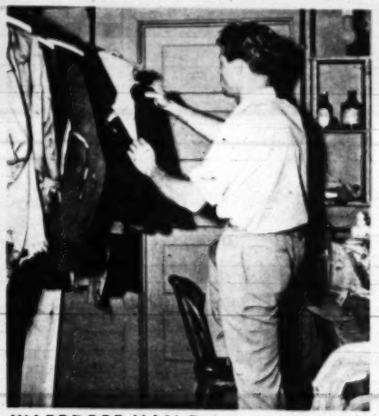
ICICLES, made by Wally Honn, result from cotton dipped in hypo crystals or paraffin.



MECHANICAL SPIDER, invented by Martin, blows realistic web of rubber cement to give creepy atmosphere to dungeons and haunted houses. Enough for centuries takes seconds.



SOUND EFFECTS EDITOR Treg Brown tumbles pile of kettles to liven cartoons.



WARDROBE MAN Dick Moder expertly tears clothes to give effect of hard wear.

MASK SPECIALIST on staff of make-up wizard Perc Westmore puts finishing touches on false-faces for "Fools For Scandal." In Hollywood, make-believe is a business. THE END.

Back plasters are the one product made for 3-way relief of painful, muscular backache:

(1) The medication in Johnson's BACK PLASTER stirs up circulation, brings the healing and warming blood to the sore spot. Tense muscles relax and the pain eases. (2) It straps twitching muscles — cuts down those jabs of pain. (3) The protective pad guards against chilling. It's almost like carrying a heating pad with you.

Tests by doctors show that Johnson's BACK PLASTER helps nearly 9 out of 10 sufferers. It's made by Johnson & Johnson — known for fine products for 61 years. At all drug stores.

HY GARDNER'S Newsreel

BETTER BUSINESS DEPT.: An Esso Service Station in Roanoke, Va., Mutual network announcer Carl Caruso hastens to inform us, makes the following offer to motorists: "Rainchecks Honored If It Rains Within 24 Hours of Washing Your Car" . . .

CORRESPONDENCE CORNER: Nancy Steiner, a column fan at Syracuse University, passes along the following sign she claims she saw displayed in a local tailor shop: "White Stripes Repainted on Worn Pin-Stripe Suits" . . .

BRAIN TRUST DEPT.: The honeymoon is over for the hundreds of couples who launched their marital bliss on Honeymoon Island, in the Gulf of Mexico. The Island is up for auction to pay off a $40,000 mortgage. How about turning it over to the United Nations—they could use a little honeymoon atmosphere . . .

SOCIAL ETIQUETTE: This department just received an invitation to one of those swank Hollywood parties. A separate card enclosed with the engraved invite read: "Admit Bearer and ONE wife." . . . Got to be awful careful not to crowd a place, huh???

AMERICAN INGENUITY: A New York shopkeeper, plagued by the incessant clamoring of riveters working on a nearby building, decided to convert their presence from a liability to an asset. He constructed a three-foot platform on springs, placed a regiment of toy soldiers on the stage and glued a sign to the window reading: "What makes these soldiers march?" The window drew great throngs despite the dirt and noise, and few of the onlookers guessed that what made the soldiers march was the annoying vibration set up by the riveters which caused the springs to shake the platform and soldiers.

NOTHING LIKE A GOOD ADDRESS: In Newark, N. J., Selective Service occupies the space formerly occupied by the New Jersey School for Drafting. (For postgraduates, no doubt!) . . . In Baltimore, the local chapter of Alcoholics Anonymous is housed in the Bromo Seltzer building . . . And the space tenanted, before the war, by the Japanese Army in New York, now houses the office of a Chinese restaurant . . .

A foolproof system . . .

PARADE OF NO-PROGRESS: The Bing Crosby Research Foundation announces it has built a better mouse trap. Exactly where the improvement lies isn't explained—but we assume that with every trap, Bing will lull the rodents to sleep, then have Bob Hope kill 'em with his gags . . .

OPPORTUNITY OF A LIFETIME? "The Customart," a weekly newspaper for the commuters of suburban Larchmont, N. Y., startled its readers on October 21st, with this classified ad: "Tombstone for sale with the name of 'John Murphy' carved in it, stone contracted for in 1937 and uncalled for. Opportunity for right party. Rye Monument Works, 214 North Ave., Rye, N. Y. (Editor's Note: There are exactly 36 'right parties' listed in the Westchester County Telephone Book)" . . .

INFLATION ITEM: Funnyman Joe E. Lewis has a brand new commercial product. Seeing as how he is sure that everybody is money-mad these days, Joe will bottle a rare new perfume and call it: "Filthy Lucre No. 5" . . .

PRACTICAL SENTIMENTALIST: We heard of a court clerk who, retiring after 25 years service, wallpapered his entire bedroom with old summonses . . .

IDEA DEPT.: A couple of Columbia University bachelors have solved their acute housing and entertaining problem in an ingenious fashion. They've built a double-decker sofa into their one-room apartment . . .

(LISTEN to Hy Gardner over your local MBS station tonight and every night except Saturday.)

ANSWERS TO PICTURE QUIZ: 1. Cornea of the eye. 2. Distress. 3. Retires. 4. 1:30, 5:30 and 9:30. 5. Victory. 6. "Catgut" comes from sheep. 7. The Order of the Garter. 8. The flag of Turkey has a crescent. 9. A right-handed man usually parts his hair on the left. 10. There are 52 white keys on a standard board.

Basketball Fans . . .

Side by side on the bench, a basketball coach and one of his players watch the play on the boards, the coach pensive, the player tense. Behind them, the stands, filled with customers, rock with emotion.

Madness often rules the stands

TO 90 MILLION AMERICANS the sight of ten men slinging a basketball back and forth in a stuffy, smoke-clogged gymnasium seems to provide an excuse for the release of a set of emotions violent enough to frighten timid men and excite the curiosity of even a sedentary philosopher.

Despite the claims and traditions of baseball and football, basketball today is probably the nation's number one spectator sport. And those addicted to this fast, easy-to-follow and exciting game seem to be the most extrovert fans in the land. At least, observers agree, they make more loud noises and more strange grimaces than horse players, fight fans and croquet enthusiasts combined.

The typical urban basketball fan is a loud-mouthed shouter of advice, comment and vituperation who frequently goes home after a game as exhausted as the players he has been insulting all night. His rural cousin is possibly less caustic in his comment, but hardly less noisy in his methods of delivering it. He, too, puts in a hard night whenever he attends a basketball game, frequently uncovering peanuts in his hair, mustard on his coat sleeve, players in his lap.

Who Suffers the Most?

This sense of direct participation in the game probably explains basketball's great appeal to fans, most of whom seem to feel that they, as well as the players, are giving all they've got. This attitude was verified recently by a former basketball player now turned fan. "You know," he said, "I get more of a workout now that I'm just a fan than I used to get when I played this violent game every night."

Violent resentment of missed shot is displayed by frantic fan.

Same shot brought groan of dismay from lady home-team rooter.

Glee on features of this fan indicate his side scored. THE END.

BOB DREADS HOLIDAY CROWDS

Bob Hope: He writes of a major Yuletide problem

EVEN THOUGH RADIO has made giveaways a year-round event, Christmas still holds great fascination for me. Maybe it's because I like my refrigerator wrapped in tinsel with red and green ribbons. Or perhaps it's because I know that even Crosby has to part with a few well-preserved shillings.

But though I really love Christmas, I have a horrible dread of Christmas shopping. I've come to believe that Christmas shopping is a combination of "Peace on earth, good will to me" and "Step on him again, Marie! Hold him there until I get to the gift counter."

And those crowds. In one Hollywood store last season, I saw a sign in the elevator that read "Capacity 20 Persons," but I guess it must have meant "20 on 20." Sidney Greenstreet got in one, and when he finally came out on the sixth floor a bunch of bobby soxers ran after him yelling "Frankie! Oh, Frankie!"

Christmas traffic is really something, too. I'll never forget the time, a couple of years ago . . . I put out my hand for a left turn and it came back gift-wrapped. Another time I raced my motor . . . and the car behind me backfired. But there's one problem all this traffic solves. That's parking. You don't have to worry about parking your car. Just get out, do all of your shopping, and climb back in it the next time it comes around the block.

"Can you draw dotted lines on my turkey, Mr. Schultz? My husband is going to carve."

And what a day the pickpockets have—every day. In fact, last season, I saw two of them waving "Hello" to each other in the midst of a crowded store. And guess what? They didn't even bother to take their hands out of my pockets.

Now I wouldn't say that the crowds are dangerous, but I understand that one toy manufacturer has really worked out a great scheme. Santa Claus will have a toy machine gun for the kids and a real one to hold back the crowds.

But here it is that season again. And there'll be plenty of problems like crowds, inflation, crowds, choosing the presents, crowds, wrappings,

Bob Hope is heard over NBC each Tuesday evening at 9:00, E.S.T.

If you can find a football team to help you out, your Christmas shopping should be easy crowds and delivery. So you must have a plan—unless you can manage to borrow the Notre Dame football team for a couple of afternoons.

Here are a few suggestions:

1. Make up your Christmas list during the summer. In that way you will be able to eliminate all friends you make in the last six months of the year.

2. Check back on those who sent you presents last year. They can be divided into two groups: those who sent you a present and thus don't really need one and those who didn't send you a present and thus don't deserve one.

3. Now go to the bank. Believe it or not, the crowds in the banks will be pretty big, too. Better go early, but not too early. Those modern burglar alarms will really frighten you!

4. And go to the store. Of course, where else can you go at Christmas time? All you have to do is to walk out your front door, and you're on your way. But you'd better wear a big identification card so the authorities will know where to send the body.

".. And I'm giving John an ironer, a lawn mower, a snow shovel—and a pair of slippers!"

5. Once inside the store, my advice is to "let others push—you just shove." That way you stand at least a 50-50 chance of getting home with your own head—and of course, with a better hat on it.

6. No matter what happens, never argue with a sales person—if you can find one to argue with. I tried it once. I asked for a lady's handbag. The clerk threw me a live alligator and said, "Here, wrestle for it."

7. You might try getting down on your hands and knees and plead for mercy and service. But I wouldn't recommend that plan. I also did that once with disastrous results. Before I knew it I was in the middle of a dice game and a $20 loser.

8. Once you've got the present, take a quick look, and run for the exits. After the store has closed you can go back and pick up your arms and legs.

9. Always have the stores wrap up your presents. I tied up so many one year that when I went to open my hand, I had to unlace my fingers. And last Christmas, I was a little late with my present to Jane Russell. I had trouble wrapping it. You know it's tough — tying the string from the inside.

"One monogrammed handkerchief, $1.10; special gift wrapping, $1.50—that's $2.60 plus tax."

10. Don't mail your packages. Have your friends call at your house for them. That way you're sure of getting presents in return. Of course, there's no telling if you have made an even swap—but I know one balding crooner who has a portable X-ray machine installed near his door at Yuletide.

And so, if you've followed my simple rules—and lived—you should have a wonderful Christmas eve. Of course, you know what Christmas Eve really is — that's when everybody stays in to see how they came out.

I will be interested in hearing how you like my Christmas shopping rules. I plan to try out every one myself. And if you should want to write to me—well, just address me care of the Hollywood Hospital.

"I see that you haven't been able to move out of that one-room apartment yet, Hotchkiss!"

Custer's last stand in Battle of the Little Big Horn, was most famous fight in the Indian Wars, Custer lost 266 men, was himself among the last to die.

The Red Men Ride Again

In a new picture book, the brave old war whoops come out of the past

THE U. S. GOVERNMENT'S 30-year war on the Indian nations of the West was once described by George Bancroft as "the history of aboriginal extermination." To schoolboys, however, the stuff of history has been obscured by the romance of the plains, the drama of the chase and the delicious terror of the ambush.

Through the years, folklore has vied with the facts of the West. But now two university researchers, Martin F. Schmitt and Dee Brown, have compiled a picture-book which should satisfy the cravings of both historian and romanticist. For their "Fighting Indians of the West"* is the chronological picture-story of the Indian wars from the Sioux ambush on Fort Kearny, Wyo. in 1866 down to the day of the last pathetic stand of the Red Men at Wounded Knee, S. D., on December 29, 1890 —and there's enough spirited romance in the story to delight any schoolboy.

The pictures — mostly photographs uncovered in the archives of the West—are moving enough to sway any man. They include a photograph of the bone strewn graves of Custer's men at Little Big Horn, a haunting picture of the Kiowa Chief White Bear, staring from the window of his jail cell towards the buffalo range he once ruled; the grubby, savage face of Geronimo, last of the great Apache warrior chiefs.

It is the Indians, of course, who rule the book. Although white men work their way into the pictures and the text, the stolid, tragic faces of the harried, beaten and proud Indians dominate the story entirely. One of the book's best pictures shows the fighting Chief Black Kettle slumping dead in his saddle after being swamped by a charge from the Seventh Cavalry. Another portrays Custer's men leading a village of Indian squaws and children through a snowdrift after they had killed all the braves. A third illustrates the drama of an Indian tribe's buffalo hunt.

The authors' text is as good as their pictures. There's no mistaking their sympathy for the Red Man — but this sympathy has not impaired either their historical objectivity nor their affection for romance. "Indian Fighters of the West" is really more than a good collection of pictures. It's a book with a real feel for the pulse of life in the Old West.

The Chiefs

ALTHOUGH most of the lore of the old west is built around white frontiersmen and U. S. cavalrymen, the heroes of "Fighting Indians of the West" are red men who fought against the oppression and treachery of their conquerers.

Among these chiefs was the brilliant and cynical Sioux chieftain Red Cloud, who swore to fight the white man "as long as I live — for the last hunting ground of my people."

Like most leaders of the Indian nations, Red Cloud's end was tragic. Hounded for years, he died a broken man.

RED CLOUD, bravest of the Sioux, swore vengeance on white chiefs who plundered his hunting grounds. Outside Ft. Kearny, Wyo., he ambushed 80 U. S. soldiers, killed them all. Later, he attacked fort itself but was beaten off.

QUANAH, half-white Comanche chieftain, fought U. S. militia in Southwest for years, but later made his peace with the white men and finally achieved full American citizenship for himself and all the members of his tribe.

RAIN-IN-THE-FACE, wounded at the Little Big Horn, lived for years to sing of triumph over Custer, "the squaw-killer" whom he hated and despised. At Custer's last stand, he served under Crazy Horse who engineered ambush.

CRAZY HORSE, Indian hero of Little Big Horn, later agreed to live on reservation. But he had been a great chief and could not stand white authority. One day, while resisting arrest, he was stabbed to death by a soldier.

I'M A SLEEPY HEAD THIS MORNING, DR. DAVIS! MAYBE I SHOULD HAVE LET YOU LEAVE EARLIER LAST NIGHT!

ER...IT WASN'T EXACTLY LATE, MISS FORREST!

DR. DAVIS IS HERE TO EXAMINE YOU! WILL YOU TAKE OFF THIS BED JACKET, PLEASE?

I'LL STEP OUT A MOMENT WHILE MISS BARTON PREPARES YOU FOR THE EXAMINATION, MISS FORREST!

WE'LL ONLY BE A FEW SECONDS, DR. DAVIS!

OUCH! YOU STUCK ME, YOU CLUMSY FOOL!

SORRY, I DIDN'T SEE THAT PIN!

MISS FORREST IS READY TO BE EXAMINED NOW, DR. DAVIS!

MY NERVES ARE ALL ON EDGE! THIS CLUMSY NURSE STUCK A PIN IN ME, PAUL!

I-I'M SURE MISS BARTON IS SORRY, MISS FORREST!

WHY, YOU KNOW I AM!

DR. DAVIS WANTS TO EXAMINE YOUR BACK, MISS FORREST!

THAT DOESN'T HURT A BIT, PAUL... AND I'VE ALWAYS BEEN AFRAID OF DOCTORS!

AFRAID?... SINCE WHEN IS A CAT AFRAID OF CREAM?

NOW BREATHE IN AND OUT DEEPLY!

I-I FEEL FAINT!

THAT'S ALL RIGHT! YOU'RE JUST HYPER-VENTILATING! INHALING AND EXHALING RAPIDLY OFTEN PRODUCES LIGHTHEADEDNESS!

SALLY! SHE HAS FAINTED!

SHE WOULD! PARDON ME WHILE I GO LOOK FOR A RESUSCITATOR! AND IF I DON'T COME BACK, MAYBE YOU'D BETTER CALL THE RESCUE SQUAD!

SALLY, WHERE ARE YOU GOING?

ANY PLACE, DR. MORGAN...WHERE I DON'T HAVE TO WATCH DR. PAUL DAVIS PLAY BOYER TO MAPLE FORREST'S BERGMAN!

TERRY AND THE PIRATES

by GEORGE WUNDER

WE SWEAR IT, HONORABLE CHUM! COMRADE PINKNEY WAS OUR LEADER. THERE WAS NO OTHER.

BROTHERRR! WATTA FISHERMAN THAT GUY WOULD MAKE.

MY SON! YOU ARE UNHARMED?

HI, POP! IF THE BABE AND HER BUDDIES HADN'T HORNED IN, I'D HAVE REALLY TAKEN CARE OF THESE CLOWNS.

YOUR PARENT TREMBLES AT THEIR NARROW ESCAPE... BUT YOU SAY THIS PERSON LIES?

SURE, POP! A PUNK THEY CALL VALENTINE IS INSIDE NOW, GOING A FEW FAST ROUNDS WITH SOME CHARACTER NAMED TERRY LEE.

SO! THE SURRENDER OF THESE TRAITORS WAS A TRICK DESIGNED TO PLAY FOR TIME SO THEIR REAL LEADER COULD ESCAPE... COME!

MISS O'HARA! MR. CHOPSTICK! MR. CHARLES! WHAT OCCURS? WHY DON'T YOU GO TO MR. LEE'S ASSISTANCE?

TSK-TSK! AND BECOME WITNESSES TO AN ASSAULT AND BATTERY CASE? BESIDES, TERRY FOUND HIM FIRST.

HI, GANG! DISCUSSION'S CLOSED...MY FELLOW DEBATER'S NOW CONVINCED DIRECT ACTION IS PRACTICAL ONLY IF ONE HAS AN ADEQUATE DEFENSE AGAINST A RIGHT TO THE CHOPS.

CONGRATULATIONS, MR. LEE. IT WAS KIND OF YOU TO DETAIN MY SON'S OTHER KIDNAPER UNTIL I COULD MEET HIM IN PERSON.

I MIGHT HAVE MISSED HIM IF HE HADN'T STOPPED TO PICK-UP HIS PAPER WORK.

AH, YES! MOST INTERESTING! NAMES OF PROMINENT COLLABORATORS...PLANS FOR TAKING OVER CITY...CORRESPONDENCE WITH REBEL TROOP COMMANDERS.

HMMM! HE WAS SO SURE I WOULD BOW TO HIS PLAN THAT HE HAD A MESSAGE ALREADY PREPARED, INFORMING THE ENEMY FIELD COMMAND THAT THE CITY'S FLANK DEFENSES WERE OPEN TO ATTACK!

Prince Valiant

IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

BY HAROLD R FOSTER

Synopsis: PRINCE VALIANT JOURNEYS TO ORD TO ASK HIS BOYHOOD FRIEND, PRINCE ARN, TO BE GODFATHER TO HIS OWN LITTLE PRINCE ARN. A QUESTING KNIGHT CHALLENGES VAL TO A JOUST—BUT, AT SIGHT OF THE 'SINGING SWORD', STOPS.

"HOW DID YOU COME BY THAT SWORD?" HE DEMANDS.

BUT THE CONTEST HAS AROUSED THE HOT JOY OF COMBAT AND VAL IS IN NO MOOD FOR CONVERSATION. "THE OWNERSHIP OF THIS BLADE IS NOT SUBJECT TO QUESTION, AND IT IS YOURS IF YOU BE MAN ENOUGH TO TAKE IT!"

"NOW THAT SOUNDS LIKE A CERTAIN FEATHER-BRAINED LAD I USED TO KNOW," SAYS THE TALL YOUTH AS HE UNLACES HIS HELMET.

"ARN!" EXCLAIMS VAL. "VAL!" EXCLAIMS ARN.

"I DID NOT RECOGNIZE YOU UNTIL I SAW THE 'SINGING SWORD'. LET US RIDE TO ORD, FOR THERE IS MUCH TO TALK ABOUT."

THIS IS VAL'S FIRST VISIT TO ORD. THE KING LIVES IN A COMFORTABLE, FORTIFIED PALACE BUILT BY THE ROMANS DURING THEIR OCCUPATION OF BRITAIN.

THE OLD KING LOOKS WITH PIERCING EYES AT THE 'SINGING SWORD'. THEN TO VAL: "I CARRIED THAT BLADE IN MY YOUTH AND, WHEN AGE TOOK THE STRENGTH FROM MY ARM, GAVE ITS KEEPING TO MY SON ARN."

"BITTERLY DID I ASSAIL HIM WHEN HE GAVE IT TO YOU!"

"BUT I HAVE FOLLOWED THE STORY OF YOUR DEEDS WITH THE CHARMED SWORD. I AM CONTENT!"

NEXT WEEK — Memories.

STRIKING A BALANCE

IT'S THE SAME OLD STORY! I'VE ADDED IT UP FRONTWARDS AND BACKWARDS SIX TIMES AND I STILL GET A BALANCE OF $289.31 ~~ BUT THE BANK GIVES ME ONLY $3.27. I DON'T THINK I COULD ALWAYS BE WRONG!

WELL, THE BANK DIDN'T KNOW. I WAS GOING TO BRING THIS ADDING MACHINE HOME FROM THE OFFICE. READ 'EM OFF TO ME, SUSIE, AND WE'LL MAKE THOSE MONEY CHANGERS LOOK LIKE A BUNCH OF MONKEYS.

YOU USED TO WORK IN A BANK, SLUG. CAN'T YOU HELP?

I JUST WASHED WINDOWS!

NOW YOU SEE, ARNOLD, WHY I THINK IT'S BEST FOR ME TO HANDLE OUR FINANCES!

YES, MY LOVE!

WHILE FREDDIE HAS THAT MACHINE HERE, I THINK I'LL RUN HOME AND GET OUR GROCERY BILLS. THEY'VE ADDED 'EM UP ALL WRONG AGAIN!

WE'LL PAY OUR HONEST DEBTS AND NOT A CENT MORE!

MOM AND POP GET EVERYTHING MIXED UP AND THEN WHEN GRANDMA GETS TIRED OF LISTENING SHE STEPS IN AND STRAIGHTENS 'EM OUT!

I THINK GRANDMA TH THARTING TO THIMMER NOW!

SEE, MOTHER? THE ADDING MACHINE SAYS I'M RIGHT— $289.31

JUST WAIT UNTIL I SHOW THAT TO THE BANK!

SURE, BUT HERE ARE TWO CHECKS WRITTEN TO SELF AND ONE TO ARNOLD SMALTZ THAT YOU NEVER MADE STUBS FOR— THIS DEPOSIT OF SEPTEMBER 14 IS IN HERE TWICE— AND THEN IF YOU SUBTRACT THE BANK CHARGES OF 37 CENTS YOU GET $3.27

AND JUST WHY, ARNOLD SMALTZ, DID FREDDIE WRITE A CHECK TO YOU?

BY THAT ADDING MACHINE, WE OWE THE GROCERY TEN DOLLARS MORE THAN THEY BILLED US FOR!

WELL, IF THEY CAN'T KEEP THEIR ACCOUNTS STRAIGHT— THAT'S THEIR WORRY!

SORRY WE'RE LATE. DID WE MISS ANYTHING

JUST THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN $289.31 AND $3.27

BUT I'M NOT ACCUSING ANYBODY OF ANYTHING. I JUST SAID IT DOESN'T JINGLE AS LOUD SINCE YOU SHOOK IT.
